The Disabled Students' Program Records were transferred to the University Archives in increments beginning in 1993.

1956 The Chancellor's Advisory Committee on Student Health Services Program is set up for the physically disabled at the University of California, Berkeley.

Edward V. Roberts, the first student with a severe mobility impairment to live on campus moves into Cowell Memorial Hospital and begins his studies.

1963 Following Roberts's successful first year, the University admits John Hessler, the second student with a severe mobility impairment to live at Cowell Hospital.

1967 Seven severely physically disabled students are living in Cowell Hospital as of October.

Carl J. Ross, Cowell Hospital administrator, proposes a program to serve ten to twelve disabled students.

1968 The Cowell Residence Program is funded by the California Dept. of Rehabilitation (DR).

Roberts becomes a part-time assistant on disability to the Dean of Students.

1969 Conflicts with the DR staff become the impetus for the organization of a student self-advocacy group for those living in Cowell Hospital, named the Rolling Quads.

The Rolling Quads write a proposal for a grant from the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare (HEW) for the fiscal year 1970-1971, to fund a physically disabled Students' program.
Students who lived at Cowell begin to move into their own apartments off campus. The Rolling Quads propose a community halfway house residence program for students attending UC Berkeley. [The "halfway house" was never established.]

In the spring quarter, the Associated Students of the University of California (ASUC) at Berkeley vote to supplement HEW funding for a program for students with disabilities, with a fee of 25 cents to be paid by every student at UC Berkeley for each academic quarter, as part of registration. The money is made available in June 1970.

HEW grants $81,000 to start the Physically Disabled Students' Program (PDSP) in July. Hessler, Michael Fuss, Chuck Grimes, and Zona Roberts (Ed Roberts' mother) set up the first office in an apartment at 2532 Durant Avenue in Berkeley.

John Hessler is the first director. Initially, PDSP serves 17 clients.

1972

The Center for Independent Living (CIL) is incorporated off campus. CIL is a Berkeley community service agency for persons with disabilities, modeled on PDSP.

1973

The Disabled Students' Union is formed.

1974

A job development specialist position is proposed for disabled students and alumni.

The Coordinating Committee for the Removal of Architectural Barriers (CCRAB) is established to resolve access problems on the UC Berkeley campus.

A dormitory residence pilot program is set up for students with disabilities. Initially it has 5 rooms in Putnam Hall in the Unit One of the student dormitory complex.

1975

Susan O'Hara begins as head of the PDSP Residence Program (serves until 1988). The residence pilot program is successful. The permanent PDSP Residence Program consists of 16 rooms in the Unit Two dorm complex staffed 24 hours a day by paid attendants. The Cowell Hospital Residence Program is closed.

California Governor Jerry Brown appoints Ed Roberts Director of the California Department of Rehabilitation.

John Hessler leaves the directorship of PDSP to become Deputy Director of the California Department of Rehabilitation. Don Lorence assumes the directorship of PDSP.

1977

Zona Roberts resigns from DSP.

1978

PDSP establishes Deaf Services.

After a program audit of DSP led by UC Berkeley professor William K. (Sandy) Muir, the University establishes the Chancellor's Physically Disabled Students' Program Advisory Board, which consists of the combination of the old Residence Hall Advisory Board and the Disabled Students Advisory Board.

1979

Don Lorence leaves the directorship of PDSP. Sharon Bonney is hired as the new director.

1980

PDSP moves to 2515 Channing Way. It now serves 254 students.

1982

PDSP changes its name to the Disabled Students' Program (DSP) to include students with learning disabilities.

1987

Sharon Bonney leaves the directorship of DSP.

A twenty-fifth anniversary survey shows 157 former residents of the program have an average salary of $32,224 in a variety of career fields.

1988

Susan O'Hara, the Residence Program director, becomes director of DSP. Bill Blanchard takes over as Residence Program director.

Stephen Hawking, world renowned physicist with Lou Gehrig's disease (amyotrophic lateral sclerosis; ALS), visits the UC Berkeley campus. DSP hosts a barbeque in his honor.

1990

DSP moves from Channing Way to the Cesar Chavez Student Center on campus.

1992

Thirty years after Ed Roberts moves into Cowell Memorial Hospital, DSP serves 800 disabled students at UC Berkeley.

Susan O'Hara retires as director. Lynn Bailiff becomes the director.

1997

Lynn Bailiff retires. Ed Rodgers is hired as the new director.

Scope and Content of Collection

The Disabled Students' Program Records, 1965-[on-going], consist of materials created or collected by the leaders and administrators of the Disabled Students' Program (DSP) at the University of California, Berkeley. The collection consists of records of the administration, services, and Susan O'Hara papers. Administrative materials include correspondence, funding information, reports, newsletters, events, and press clippings. Services materials document the residence program, attendant service, wheelchair repair, employment information, blind services, and deaf services. Susan O'Hara's papers contain records from her tenure as the first coordinator for the DSP residence program and as the director of DSP.

DSP began with the activism of a group of disabled students known as the Rolling Quads, who together with the UC administration created the first comprehensive service group for disabled students. The collection documents DSP's development from a few severely disabled students in the late-1960's to a large organization serving hundreds of students... with a variety of disabilities today. The program helps disabled students transition from home to independent living, incorporating services and peer counseling with academics. DSP's innovative blend of advocacy and services became a model for other student and community self-help programs around the world.

The bulk of the material documents DSP administration and the services offered to disabled students. The administration records contain background information, correspondence, and grant proposals to the U.S. Department of Health, Education and Welfare (HEW) which later became the Office of Education, the California Dept. of Rehabilitation, and University of California (UC). These records chart the development of DSP from a grassroots organization to a full-fledged UC student program. The UC grant and budget records include Associated Students funding and applications for individual one-time DSP grants to students. Also of interest are the staff and advisory board meeting agendas, reports on disability rights, legislation, accessibility compliance, and conferences, newsletters, brochures, guides, event information, DSP's office facilities renovations, and press clippings showing DSP's use of media coverage.

Information on DSP services includes material on the residence program, first housed in Cowell hospital, later in accessible dormitories. The residence program, along with the attendant referral service, exemplifies the tenets of the movement for independent living. DSP services acted as the impetus for the Center for Independent Living (CIL), which expanded similar services into the Berkeley community. CIL became a national model for a community-based organization for people with disabilities, directed by people with disabilities. DSP records document the wheelchair repair shop, University and public transportation, job development programs, deaf services, blind services, and University library services, showing DSP's efforts to aid students with disabilities.

Susan O'Hara's papers document her tenure as coordinator for the residence program (1975-1988) and as director of DSP (1988-1992). The notes, calendars, and documentation on the oral history project show O'Hara's dedication to the program, and the individual files she created on DSP staff and alumni include information on many disability rights leaders. The early records of the DSP organization shed light on its origin and growth, while information on the residence program is valuable as an example of the principles of the independent living movement. Alumni became active in the disability rights and independent living movements after their experiences with DSP, helping to found CIL. The DSP records trace the transformation of a grass-roots movement to a UC agency, and indicate the growth of its influence in the founding of CIL and similar organizations.

Arrangement
Arranged hierarchically and chronologically.

Scope and Content Note
The records are further divided into nine sub-series: History and Background, Correspondence, Funding, Meeting Agendas and Notes, Reports, Publications, Events, Office Facilities and Media Coverage. History and Background includes historical narratives, policy statements, and brochures. Correspondence contains information on general office administration as well as specific issues such as conflicts with the Department of Rehabilitation, and reactions to state and federal funding cuts. Funding consists of grant proposals to the U.S. Department of Health, Education, and Welfare (HEW), later the Office of Education, the California Dept. of Rehabilitation, and the University of California. University materials include Associated Students funds, annual budget reports and applications for one-time DSP grants to individual students. Meeting Agendas and Notes contain material from Staff and Advisory Board Meetings. Reports is further sub-divided into General, State of California, University of California, DSP, and Conferences, and includes material on issues relating to DSP, disability rights, independent living and post-secondary education for people with disabilities. Publications includes newsletters, brochures, and special publications by DSP: guides to independent living, housing, and accessible restaurants. Events contains material on Disability Awareness Day, International Year of Disabled Persons, residence program reunions and other events. Office Facilities documents the offices DSP occupied, including wheelchair accessible renovation plans. Media Coverage consists of collected press clippings of DSP. See also Series 3: Susan O'Hara Papers for material about the Disability Rights and Independent Living Movement Oral History Project and the DSP Advisory Board.
