Organizational History

In 1940, Madeleine Haas Russell and her brother, William Haas, established their philanthropic organization, the Columbia Foundation, for "the furtherance of the public welfare." The Columbia Foundation was a charitable organization dedicated to funding programs of groups in the Northern California region, as well as nationally and internationally.

Madeleine Haas Russell (1915-1999) was born in San Francisco and was orphaned at an early age with the deaths of her widowed father, Charles Haas, head of the San Francisco business firm of Haas Brothers, and her grandfather, Jacob Stern, a nephew of Levi Strauss and a principal of Levi Strauss and Company. Madeleine attended Smith College and graduated in 1937. In 1946, Madeleine married Leon B. Russell, a screen writer for Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer and later an executive at Pan American World. The couple were divorced in 1959. Madeleine had three children: Alice Russell-Shapiro, Charles P. Russell, and Christine H. Russell.

As the heir to large fortunes from both sides of the family, Madeleine began her philanthropic work almost as soon as she came of age. The Columbia Foundation, which she and her brother William Haas (1916-1943) founded, was one of California's earliest private foundations with interests in environmental, cultural, and social efforts - efforts, in some cases, that were not yet well understood or supported by the public at large. One of its earliest grants was to the Japanese American Student Relocation Council, in support of college education for Japanese-American youth interned during World War II. In addition, early support in the 1940s was given to forward thinking and varied social programs, such as funding for birth-control education and supplies for migrant women in California, and support to the Emergency Committee of Atomic Scientists to raise public awareness over nuclear energy use. Over the years, the Columbia Foundation ultimately focused its main philanthropic efforts on several core areas: human rights, sustainable communities, food and farming, the environment, and arts and culture.

In the area of human rights, Columbia Foundation's goal was to fund programs that protected basic rights - including economic, social, cultural, civil, and political rights. Columbia was one of the first foundations to support protection of civil and human rights for gays and lesbians, with its 1979 grant to the Human Rights Foundation. In addition to providing support for gays and lesbians, the Foundation also focused its efforts in the areas of second chance education programs for incarcerated juveniles and adults, as well as public financing of campaigns and election reform efforts.

The Columbia Foundation also worked to advance community and economic development programs for a just and equitable life for all species. As such, the Foundation focused its grantmaking efforts on promoting sustainable food systems in order to secure a livelihood for farmers and farm workers; protect natural resources, biodiversity, and public and environmental health; and provide access to affordable and nutritious food from local and regional sources. As part of these efforts, Columbia funded the Roots of Change program to promote California's transition to sustainable organic food and farming systems. In addition, the Foundation helped establish the Agroecology Program at the University of California, Santa Cruz. Columbia Foundation's interest in the environment was also expressed through significant support to many groups, including the Natural Resources Defense Council and the Environmental Protection Information Center, to protect the Headwaters Forest.

In its efforts to promote the Arts, the Columbia Foundation focused on programs that enhanced the quality of life and that were accessible and affordable for a broad and diverse public. The Foundation's grants supported art that encouraged civil awareness for the development of sustainable communities and economies and for the protection of human rights. As such, it funded programs that provided opportunities to artists from diverse cultures for the creation, development, performance, and exhibition in the performing, literary, and visual arts. The Foundation's support of programs in the San Francisco area and United Kingdom included grants to individual artists working in collaboration with communities and funding for the commissioning of over 30 new operas.

In addition, the Columbia Foundation also used a portion of its resources to fund grants in fields of interest outside of its core guidelines. These grants were initiated by members of the Foundation's board of directors and focused on new and emerging issues, community institutions of historic interest, and philanthropy and the non-profit sector.

Throughout its existence, the Columbia Foundation distributed nearly $85 million to various organizations in California, as well as nationally and internationally. The Columbia Foundation closed on November 30, 2013.

Scope and Content of Collection

The Columbia Foundation records document a history of charitable giving to organizations working in the areas of human rights, sustainable communities, food and farming, the environment, and arts and culture. The records consist primarily of grant-related materials and extensive background documents pertaining to individual grant-awarded programs, as well as various administrative and organizational files. The records are divided into two series:

- Series I: Grant Files
- Series II: Administrative Files

The grant files represent the bulk of the collection and are comprised of materials documenting the solicitation, approval, and progress of individual Columbia Foundation grant-awarded programs of organizations working in the areas of human rights, sustainable communities, the environment, and arts and culture. In addition, the Foundation also focused its philanthropy on a myriad of other areas that reflected current conditions and opportunities - including agriculture and sustainable food, death penalty issues, the right to die, nuclear weapons, and various other community and social concerns. Grant files include: grantee solicitation letters and proposals, grantee program progress reports, grantee program overviews, grantor award letters and recommendations, and general grant-related correspondence.

The administrative files consist of materials documenting the administrative and organizational functions of the Columbia Foundation. Administrative files include: minutes and dockets of the board of directors, constitutions, by-laws, committee and program reports, grant lists and authorizations, correspondence, and historical and general subject files. In addition, the administrative files also contain general publicity records - including press files, awards, conferences, and various media-related materials.
