Biography: the Rikers, the PCDW, and Holy City
Riker later claimed it was a revelation in the hills above San Jose in 1906 that led him to change from palm reader to “The Comforter.” A former San Francisco waiter, salesman and con-man, Riker, and later Ohio-born mechanic Irvin Fisher (1881-1980), drew many of their followers from among financially struggling and marginally educated middle-aged throughout the Midwest. (Riker first met Fisher in Indianapolis in 1913). Counter to rumor, they were not all single, nor was “free love” a common practice. Riker, charismatic and all-knowing, offered simple answers to life’s many complex questions.
Holy City flourished during the 1920s and 30s as a popular road stop along the difficult mountain road from San Jose to Santa Cruz, where the curious could stop for a bite to eat or help with an overheated radiator, or take a peek at a strange array of attractions or debate “perfect government.” Although the PCDW itself probably never numbered more than about 30 confirmed disciples, the population of Holy City and the surrounding neighborhood peaked at around 300. Holy City’s small population declined rapidly after the 1940 construction of Highway 17, which bypassed the village. The real death knell, however, was Lucile Riker’s death in 1950. While she had not been able to keep her husband’s political ambitions in check (a career move that had divided the PCDW community), her very pragmatic business sense had kept the community self-supporting. Riker lost control of the property in an attempt to revise Holy City’s fortunes by transferring ownership to an alleged, and very minor, Hollywood producer, Maurice Kline, in 1956-57. Subsequent legal battles left the PCDW dispossessed and Holy City in the hands of a land development company. By the early 1960s, little was left after arson and bulldozers destroyed most buildings.

Summary of Collection

Harry Plate, journalist and writer, served as Associate Editor of California Today, the Sunday magazine section of the San Jose Mercury News. He subsequently moved to Arizona. These files were compiled in 1970 to support what Plate intended to be a series of three feature articles on the life of William Riker (1873-1969), and the evolution of Holy City, California, home of the disciples of Riker’s Perfect Christian Divine Way.

To get beyond the “tidy collection of vignettes” that made up most popular accounts of Holy City, Plate interviewed Riker family members, aging disciples, and Holy City neighbors and critics. Riker’s niece, Helen Dunning, and nephew, Ray Riker, helped Plate pin down elusive details of Riker’s early life and background. “First disciple” Irvin B. Fisher, then approaching 90, provided additional details about The Philosophy, while Joe Albert, an early disciple and one of the few remaining PCDW residents of Holy City, allowed him limited access to the Riker house. The PCDW’s youngest disciple and self-proclaimed heir, Wallace Stovall, gave Plate access to early documentation and photographs.

Plate’s extensive correspondence with Robert Alexander Clogher provides special insight. Clogher, a local surveyor and self-styled “Passing Paladin of the Holy Citizens,” had helped the remaining eight elderly PCDW disciples protest Riker’s illegal “sale” of Holy City to an alleged Hollywood producer, Maurice Kline, in 1956. Fourteen years later, Clogher still held the San Jose Mercury News culpable for siding with Riker and Kline in dispossessing the elderly disciples. Clogher found Plate a sympathetic ear, however, and he shared much of what he’d learned about the community and helped correct many apocryphal stories.

Included among Plate’s research and interview notes are many original Riker letters, 100 photographs and postcards, other early PCDW documents and printed material. In addition to the original material, several sources (particularly Wallace Stovall) allowed Plate to photocopy their originals. Also included are news clippings, and a notebook kept by postmistress and bookkeeper Winifred Allington.

Plate’s “Riker: From Mechanic to Messiah,” California Today (San Jose Mercury News) (30 August 1970), pp. 6-10, about Ed Riker’s early years, was the only article he completed on the topic. “I’ll probably do two or three other installments, covering the subsequent years—but not right away,” he wrote Helen Dunning. “First, we’ll wait to see if this brings any new witnesses out of the woods.” Local and national events of this busy summer apparently intruded. Nevertheless, Plate’s collection remains a rich source for further study of Holy City’s community.

Riker and other PCDW members were often involved in property related lawsuits, and more serious legal actions, including alleged fraud, sedition, and murder (most of which are covered in correspondence and newsclippings elsewhere in the collection). Plate was especially intrigued with Riker’s interaction with Melvin Belli, who defended him from sedition charges in 1942 by downplaying Riker as crazy, and the 1956-59 controversy over Riker’s inappropriate “sale” of Holy City to Marvin Kline. (see also notes and correspondence about probate of Lucille Riker’s will, folder 6, and Robert Clogher correspondence on this battle, folders 11, 12).

Re: John Arthur Landstrom

Scope and Content Note

Mostly Harry Plate’s correspondence with Robert Clogher, 1969-71, as well as copies of Clogher letters to other editors regarding not only Holy City and the PCDW, past and present, but current topics such as women’s liberation, the Nixon administration, the role of the press, and national and local politics. Born in New York City in 1917, Clogher received his undergraduate degree from Columbia, did graduate work at the New School for Social Research in Social Psychology (1948-50), and moved to California in 1952. In 1954, he first met Riker—who piqued his curiosity, not his loyalty. In December 1956, his car broke down in Holy City, and he was invited to stay by James Milton Wood (1905-1968), service station attendant, former journalist, and allegedly Riker’s “chief scribe” (confidential secretary). Although he was not a disciple (he rented a room behind the gas station), Clogher enjoyed their anti-establishment stance, but remained highly critical of Riker as a bigot and self-proclaimed prophet. Clogher and Wood were evicted by Riker (who considered them “troublemakers”) in 1957, after they promoted a disciples protest in late December 1956 and early 1957 against Riker’s alleged sale of the Holy City property to Maurice Kline. Clogher continued his fight for legal and public recognition of the PCDW’s corporate title to the Holy City property in this 1970 correspondence. Clogher, a local surveyor, was also founding director of “Prometheans” in 1950, and subsequently a publicity director and an early president of the National Nudist Council, He ran unsuccessfully, but in good humor, for various local offices.

Fisher, Irwin Bryant (1881-1980)
Scope and Content Note
“First disciple” and one of the three original founders of the Perfect Divine Christian Way, the Ohio-born Fisher was a mechanic and carpenter, and superintendent of Holy City’s “Mechanical Engineering.” Fisher first met Riker in 1913 in Indianapolis, and was among the three 1918 trustees incorporating the PCDW in Los Angeles. He established two schools and headquarters in Los Angeles and San Francisco, and received the official title of Reverend from Riker; he was the only disciple to be deemed “Father.” He moved to Holy City in the early 1920s. In 1942, Fisher murdered Joseph Witzig and seriously injured Arthur Kastner in an argument over a location of a fire ladder. Sentenced to five years in San Quentin, he was paroled in 1944, and cautioned not to return to Holy City. He subsequently moved to a Quonset hut on Summit Road in the Santa Cruz Mountains, not far from Holy City, where he lived until his death at age 98.

Constance Kidwell, a Holy City resident (not a disciple), had many stories about Riker ("a con man through and through") and life at Holy City. Unfortunately, many are based on rumor or otherwise unsubstantiated, with facts awry and names misspelled, but her comments are revealing of beliefs held by Holy City’s neighbors. (Plate’s April 13, 1970 interview suggests her sources were limited to Holy City postmistress Helen Long, a senile Harry Ryan, and local journalist Jim Edmunson.) Her manuscript, “The End of a Utopia,” was offered to and purchased by the San Jose Mercury-News, but not published).

Stovall File Info: Materials provided by Wallace E. Stovall

Scope and Content Note
Miscellaneous notes and letters, photocopied by Harry Plate from the files of Wallace E. Stovall of San Jose. Stovall first met Riker in 1937 as a child, and later as a radio repairman. Although he did not live at Holy City, he was named President of Perfect Christian Divine Way in 1968 when it was reincorporated. He then moved the PCDW to San Jose, where he operated his TV repair shop. (At this Holy City election, William Riker was elected secretary, and Joe Albert, James Wood, and Irwin Fisher were named board members; Stephen Rozum joined board in 1969. Riker, who had been in and out of rest homes, died that year. Both Stovall and Joe Albert were allegedly writing up the story of Holy City, but only Stovall agreed to help Plate, on the basis of quid pro quo. NOTE: this folder includes photocopies of Riker and PCDW materials similar to those in folders 5-8.
