Biographical / Historical
Orin Borsten was born on February 19th of 1912 in Lithonia, Georgia. He served in the Army Medical Corps during World War II and married a female Navy officer, Laura Rapaport. In the 1940's he started his career as the office manager for Russell Birdcall who had a column in the Los Angeles Daily News. He then worked for Erskine Johnson in the 1950's. In the 1960's he began writing scripts, one being "Angel Baby." After writing screenplays and television episodes, he moved on to work with Universal Pictures. This job lasted him until 1976, which was the year that he co-wrote "A Loving Gentleman: The Love Story of William Faulkner and Meta Carpenter" with Meta Carpenter. He spent his later years with his children, Joseph and Joan. In 2006, he died from natural causes in his home in Studio City, California. He was 94.

Scope and Contents
The Orin Borsten Collection is comprised of four series: Correspondence, Literature, Film, and Photographs. The collection contains few personal items besides the correspondence, which does shed light on Orin's contributions to the industry and his hard-working character. Most of the series are comprised of materials from the Golden Age of Hollywood. Hollywood icons such as Gary Cooper, Alfred Hitchcock, Charlie Chaplin, and John Wayne are featured in the collection through movie scripts, autographed photographs, correspondence, and memorabilia. Some notable pieces in the collection are a draft of "Silence of the Lambs," a 1963 issue of "The New Yorker," rare Bessie Smith photographs, letter to Charles Chaplin from Alfred Hitchcock, letter to Orin from Goldie Hawn, John Wayne movie mugs, and an Alfred Hitchcock tie.

Series One: Correspondence, is comprised of two subsseries, which includes Personal Correspondence and Non-Orin Correspondence. The correspondence in the Personal Correspondence subseries is mainly celebrity correspondence that Orin saved throughout his life. Most letters thank Orin for his work on different projects. He has continual correspondence with Louis Daniel Broasky, Irving Caesar, John Cassavetes, Sheila Graham, Lawrence Lagner, and James Purdy. In the Non-Orin Correspondence series, there is a section of Sonia Wolfson correspondence. She was a publicist at the time and a friend of Orin's. This series also includes a letter to Charles Chaplin from Alfred Hitchcock.

Series Two: Literature, is comprised of two subsseries: Programs and Writings. The Programs subsseries includes programs from different theatrical shows or events lead by a writer. This subsseries features programs from Tennessee Williams plays: "The Night of the Iguana," and "Tiger Tail." The next subsseries in the Literature series is Writing. The Writing subsseries has articles, bumper stickers, poetry, unpublished writings, short stories, and a lecture address, all from prominent writers from the 60s through the 80s. One of the highlights in this subsseries includes an unpublished chapter of "A Loving Gentleman" written by Meta Doherty Wilde and Borsten. This subsseries also includes a copy of The New Yorker from 1963, an unpublished address by Lillian Smith, and William Faulkner envelopes and stamps.

Series Three: Film, is comprised of three subsseries: Scripts and Screenplays, Programs, and Memorabilia. The Scripts and Screenplays subsseries includes works in which Borsten was involved and some are from his personal collection. The scripts range from first, third, to final drafts, shooting scripts, accompaniment, and uncorrected proofs. A highlight of this subsseries is the script of "The Silence of the Lambs." There are also copies of "Porky's" and "The Outer Limits": "Corpus Earthling," in which he was involved. The next subseries, Programs, includes programs from movie screenings, as well as lunches with famous actors, directors, and producers. Highlights of the Programs series includes: "Catch-22," "Gone with the Wind," and "A Centennial Tribute to Mary Pickford." Lastly, the subseries of Memorabilia is comprised of items from Borsten's personal collection. Featured in this subseries a William Faulkner poster, a "Pulp Fiction" for your consideration, and an Alfred Hitchcock tie.

Series Four: Photographs, does not contain a subseries. Many of the photograph's subjects are old Hollywood celebrities including Roy Rodgers and Dale Evan, Shirley Temple, Belle Bennett, and Gary Cooper. In addition, there are several signed photographs with short messages. There are no photographs of Borsten or his family.

Abstract: Due to the formal nature of the letter from McCarthy to Borsten, we can confidently surmise that this is the first correspondence between the two men. The subject of the letter is McCarthy’s recently-published book, and the mixed reviews it had gotten--Borsten had apparently written a complimentary letter in regards to it, and McCarthy was thanking him for that in this letter. It is also alluded to that Borsten may have intended to get the Los Angeles Times to review McCarthy’s book.

<td>Abstract: In McCarthy’s next letter to Borsten, he addresses him as &quot;Orin&quot;, a departure from the more formal tone of his last letter. He thanks Borsten for his efforts on his novel’s behalf, and inquires about the writer of the review he had enclosed in this letter, a William Boozer who had reviewed his latest work, &quot;Child of God&quot;. There is mention of a potential shared relationship with Faulkner’s old editor who just so happened to be McCarthy’s current one at Random House, Albert Erskine-McCarthy believes Boozer and Erskine may know each other. He closes by asking Borsten what he is currently writing, signing off with “all the best.”</td>

He writes Borsten to re-establish contact, providing him with his current address in El Paso, and to inquire as to the possibility of getting together with Borsten sometime in March when he may find himself out in Los Angeles to visit another friend.</td>

<td>Abstract: In McCarthy’s latest letter, he begins by thanking Borsten for his efforts related to the Black Sparrow project, and talks a bit more about The Gardener’s Son project he mentioned in his last letter. He shares his thoughts about the lastest Faulkner documentary, and chalks up its failure to an ill-informed producer or director by the name of Longstreet. He touches on a film called Wise Blood that Borsten brought up, and addresses Borsten’s thoughts on the novel The Executioner’s Song, which he was rather impressed with. At the end he mentions that he is struggling with rewriting his latest novel, a Western, but that an excerpt of it will be coming out in the Triquarterly soon. This is the first letter of his that we see written on a typewriter as opposed to handwritten.</td>

To Orin from Cormac McCarthy 13 August 1980

Abstract: In this letter, McCarthy speaks more on Borsten's European trip, and inquires more about how his book is coming along. It seems as though Borsten requested information on how to acquire a copy of the Triquarterly that McCarthy's Western was being previewed in, because McCarthy provides the publisher's information for the west coast. McCarthy goes on to discuss a few different films that he'd seen or heard of recently, and makes Borsten aware that he will be traveling in the coming months, and will send him an address once he secures one.

box 7, folder 11

To Orin from Cormac McCarthy 27 January 1981

Abstract: McCarthy begins his letter by thanking Borsten for a newsletter about Faulkner that he had sent his way, and a request to thank Boozer, the columnist, for him. He then shares that his trip to California has been put off for the time being, but when he does eventually get out there, he would like to "rendezvous" with Borsten. McCarthy then responds to what we can assume is Borsten’s complaint about writer's block or something of that sort-- McCarthy writes an eloquent and inspiring section about the writing process and the toll it takes on your emotions that is very insightful. He wraps up by sharing what he has been reading and what he plans to in the near future, and bids Borsten to keep in touch.

box 7, folder 12

To Orin from Cormac McCarthy 10 April 1981

Abstract: McCarthy begins his letter by noting that his responses are lagging somewhat behind, and that he is currently in Knoxville working on his latest book-- it's going slower than he would like, and he believes it will be published sometime next fall. He inquires as to Borsten’s project, noting with sympathy Borsten's struggle with hay fever. He mentions that his editor Erskine is working on a biography of Faulkner, and he himself is reading a novel by Flaubert. He concludes by recommending that Borsten check out "Encounter with an Angry God" by Carobeth Laird if he hasn't already, and reminiscing upon his time in the desert.

box 7, folder 13

To Orin from Cormac McCarthy 28 October 1981

Abstract: McCarthy opens with a note that he has moved locations one again, this time to Lexington to house-sit for the winter. He talks a bit about his time in Europe, as Borsten has apparently just gotten back from a trip over there. He apologizes for missing Boozer, who was apparently in the area, and mentions a particularly negative review Suttree received from a Tennessee paper, to which his friend Shelby Foote wrote a letter to the editor complaining about. He offers to meet with a friend of Borsten's to consult on a movie he's working on, The Gardener's Son, and thanks Borsten for his kind offer to house him if he ever makes it out to California.

box 7, folder 14

To Orin from Cormac McCarthy 21 February 1984

Abstract: McCarthy opens his letter with an apology for taking so long to write Borsten back- this time it was over a period of two years, apparently- and informs him that he just got back from a trip to visit relatives back east. He notes that his Western has gone to the editor and will indeed be out this coming fall, and makes a few amusing comments about a project his editor is working on for Faulkner's biography, poking fun at most literary biographers' inability to write well. He mentions a few more movies that he has seen, and notes that the Book of Daniel was much better off as a novel rather than a film, agreeing with Borsten's point. McCarthy ends this letter with the fact that he has recently purchased a home in El Paso and is in the process of remodeling it, so he will most likely be at this address for a while. The envelope is that of Hotel Victoria in Chiuhuahua, Mexico, but McCarthy wrote his El Paso address over the top of it, presumably for Borsten to respond with.
To Orin from Cormac McCarthy 19 November 1984
Abstract: McCarthy begins this letter with a musing on the nature of Texas, and its unique identity within America. He quips that El Paso is the furthest west you can get and still be in the south, or the furthest away you can get from the south and still be in the south. -incomplete-

To Orin from Cormac McCarthy 19 November 1984
Abstract: McCarthy begins by describing Texas’ unique identity as a state, something he considers rare for a nation of immigrants, and makes a quip about El Paso being the furthest away you can get from the South while still being considered a southerner. He notes that his latest book will be out in March, and he'll be sure to get Borsten an early copy. He goes on to mention a few books he had read lately, and two movies he had seen, and closes the letter by noting that his books have all been released in paperback, and that Random House was considering putting out a vintage edition of of Sutterer in conjunction with the Lindhurst Foundation, which he dubs “a strange marriage”. This letter was written from El Paso, Texas.

To Orin from Cormac McCarthy 12 March 1985
Abstract: McCarthy begins this letter by sharing that he's sent an advance copy separately to Borsten of his latest novel "Blood Meridian", and requests Orin's opinion on the review copy he sent as well, because he doesn't trust "them" (Random House) to get it right. He congratulates Borsten on his most recent stage production, and in response to a question Borsten must have asked, shares that he doesn't remember Requiem for a Nun (Orin's past play) faring too well. He complains of the over-publishing of Faulkner's writings, and recommends Borsten see "The Killing Fields", adding that he will go see "Daniel" upon Orin's recommendation. This letter was written from his residence in El Paso, Texas.

To Orin from Cormac McCarthy 27 April 1985
Abstract: McCarthy begins by thanking Borsten for his letters, and for sending a review his way, and warns Orin to be more sparing in his encouragement of his work for fear that it will give him too big a head. He mentions a number of movies that he's seen recently, giving brief opinions on each, and notes that the Oscar win of F. Murray Abraham for his role in Amadeus caused "a great stir" in El Paso due to the actor's ties there. He wishes Borsten the best of luck with his stage production, and closes the letter. This correspondence was written while he was in El Paso, Texas.

To Orin from Cormac McCarthy 20 June 1985
Abstract: McCarthy begin his letter by thanking Borsten for sending him more reviews on "Blood Meridian", and congratulates him on the positive reception of his stage production. He comments on the difficulty of "keeping a director's hands off the script" as a writer, and goes on to talk about his editor, Erskine, and what he appreciates about him. He mentions briefly the American author McGuane, stating that while he's a excellent author, he wants to be a personality, and that's "about the worst luck a writer can have". McCarthy goes on to thank Borsten for a Random House article, and makes a quip about his semi-hostile relationship with them. He offers his condolences to Borsten's brother for an unstated difficulty he is experiencing, and closes the letter by discussing the renovation of his home in El Paso.
box 7, folder 19
To Orin from Cormac McCarthy 16 October 1985

Abstract: McCarthy pens a short letter this time, just a single page, and begins by thanking Orin for sending him another review. He adds a rather scathing remark about the indifference he feels about book reviews, good or bad, due to his opinion that they are "the bottom rung on the journalistic ladder". He was, however, appreciative of Borsten's kind words. He extends congratulations to Meta D. Carpenter for her status as a "star" at the Women in Film luncheon, and quips that Bette Midler will no longer be invited to such events due to her personality. He then wishes Borsten well on his trip to Europe, and expresses his desire to return as well. He writes this letter from El Paso, Texas.

box 7, folder 20
To Orin from Cormac McCarthy 25 February 1986

Abstract: McCarthy begins his letter with thanks to Borsten for sending another review from the LA times, calling that one "instructive and sobering", and commenting on how the disappearance of serious literature means that book reviews are giving undue attention to mystery and gothic romance novels such as his. He then moves on to movies, agreeing with much of Borsten's assessments and discussing a movie his friend Dick Pearce was filming in New Orleans that he'd like to see do well. McCarthy closes by mentioning that he has just wrapped up writing a play, joking that he's moving in on Borsten's territory. This letter was penned in El Paso, Texas.

box 7, folder 21
To Orin from Cormac McCarthy 3 June 1986

Abstract: McCarthy begins this letter by offering his condolences to Borsten, who has just lost his brother, and shares that he has a younger brother and has often thought that he'd prefer something bad to happen to himself rather than to his brother. He also encourages Borsten, who had shared that he is suffering with depression as a result of the death, to consider depression as simply a chemical imbalance, and eat well, get some rest, and exercise regularly to help remedy it. McCarthy then goes on to discuss some movies, noting that the playwright of "night, Mother", Marsha Norman, reached out to him about his recently-written play to see if they could get it produced. He closes by mentioning all that all his books are currently in print now, and by encouraging Borsten to stay well. This letter was written in El Paso, Texas.

box 7, folder 22
To Orin from Cormac McCarthy 16 September 1986

Abstract: McCarthy opens this letter by musing on the danger that biographers, critics and writers all face, which is when their first projects become too acclaimed, that in their minds writing a second becomes too great a task, and they give up rather than spoil the reputation they gained by the first. He references Harper's Lee's and Ralph Ellison's in-progress second novels as examples. McCarthy then goes on to share that his play has made its way into the hands of ten different theaters + directors, and that his attention in now turned to a screenplay he's working on. He has a trip planned to Buenos Aires + Patagonia to visit a biologist friend of his, Roger Payne; this will be his first trip to South America. He expresses his sorrow over the news of Borsten's sister-in-law's passing, and shares a similar experience he had with his mother, and notes that it's important to appreciate people both while they are with us and after they've passed. He wishes Borsten luck on his film project, and signs off. This letter was written in El Paso, Texas.

box 7, folder 23
To Orin from Cormac McCarthy 2 March 1987

Abstract: McCarthy begins by thanking Borsten for the Christmas card, and recounting his opinions of the play Hedda Gabler, concluding that it relied too heavily on the plot. He mentions that he sent Borsten a postcard from his seven-week trip to Argentina, and that it was a great adventure. He closes by sharing that he had been working on another book since getting back, and that his screenplay hasn't yet been picked up. This letter was written in El Paso, Texas.
To Orin from Cormac McCarthy 17 August 1987

Abstract: McCarthy thanks Orin for his last letter and the items enclosed within it, and shares that the reviews remind him of a response Henry Miller occasionally gave when questioned about certain passages- that he just liked how they sounded, and didn't entirely know what he meant by them. He goes on to discuss plays and movies he's seen or heard of lately, and comments negatively on the casting of Tommy Lee Jones as William Faulkner. McCarthy wraps up his last paragraph by thanking Orin for his encouragement and friendship. This letter was written in El Paso, Texas.

To Orin from Cormac McCarthy 5 January 1988

Abstract: This is the letter that follows Cormac McCarthy and Orin Borsten's first meeting. Borsten attended McCarthy's reading of his play, as the letter details, and McCarthy thanks him for his helpful suggestions and notes. He notes that authors who try to turn playwright are often discouraged by the initial failure that comes along with learning a new craft, and that's why many remain simply novelists. He promises that once the play take more form in terms of production, he'd happily seek Borsten's opinion. McCarthy closes by mentioning a few more movies, and with his intention to keep working on the play while the reading is fresh in his mind. This letter was written in El Paso, Texas.

To Orin from Cormac McCarthy 21 March 1988

Abstract: McCarthy begins his letter by questioning the real significance of Proust's "A La Recherche", and chalks it up to the fact it's written in French; anything written in French is automatically important. He regretfully states that he hasn't made much progress on the play, as he has been consumed by his novel, but he hopes to get to it sometime soon. He'll be taking a trip to Mexico for his health, and taking his work with him. He closes by wishing Borsten well, and promising to let him know if there are any developments with the play. This letter was written in El Paso.

To Orin from Cormac McCarthy unknown

Abstract: This is the last piece of correspondence between Borsten and McCarthy- it is a postcard of Ballymaloe House in Ireland. McCarthy shares that he has been in Ireland for a couple weeks and that it's quite beautiful, though it's rained every day. He jokes about getting gout from the good cooking, and wishes Borsten happy holidays and a great start to the new year.
