Foreword
EARL WARREN, GOVERNOR
by Merrell F. Small
Secretary, 1946-53
Office of Governor Earl Warren
That researcher will be disappointed who delves into the Warren Papers with any expectation of discovering things politically sensational to write about.
Intrigue was alien to Earl Warren's nature. In all his dealings he was open, aboveboard and non-partisan. Republican in national politics, in the state he was literally apolitical. Why not? The election laws of his era permitted the registrants of all parties to choose him as their nominee, which they did in primary elections including one even for the high office of Papers, 1924-53

Inventory of the Earl Warren

Once I made the remark that the governor didn't furnish us with many "signals" about our duties. His answer was, "I hired you because I believed you were someone of good character and that you have ability, so if you study the problem you're faced with and discuss it with the department involved when you need additional information, and then do what you think is right and fair, you won't have any trouble with me."

Another way of keeping abreast of the governor's thinking was to attend his press conferences. These were not haphazard. Warren's press secretary, Verne Scoggins, scheduled them twice weekly, one timed for the advantage of morning newspapers and the other giving a lead to the evening papers. They didn't always produce front-page headlines, but they were pleasant occasions. The reporters had to work hard at being objective with this hearty, friendly man.

As with the speeches, Warren could use his press conferences effectively on occasion. His advocacy of a three-cent gasoline tax increase to finance major highway improvements was bitterly opposed by the oil companies. In the midst of the struggle the companies simultaneously raised the price of their product three cents a gallon. Warren believed this was intended to checkmate him, but he proved to be the better chess player. He quietly announced to the newspapers that he had asked the United States Justice Department to consider whether there might have been collusion. The opposition to his highway bill collapsed.

Most of the governor's working day was spent on the telephone or conferring at his desk. In the files there are daily lists of telephone calls and the names of the people who saw the governor, but the researcher will regret that the business done was not fully recorded. At the same time, nothing was neglected. Warren followed up on his conferences and conversations with verbal instructions to the staff, and the correspondence reflects the action taken.

The excellent descriptive catalog of the Papers compiled under the direction of the Chief of Archives, Dr. W. N. Davis, Jr., and his principal assistant, David Snyder, will facilitate for the researcher his evaluation of what they contain and in finding specific items, the wartime internment of California residents of Japanese ancestry, for example.

As attorney general, Warren took swift and energetic action following the sneak attack on Pearl Harbor by the Japanese Navy to move these residents out of the war zone—all the area of California within 150 miles of the coast. Because a high proportion of the enlisted men in America's Pacific Fleet came from California, this state suffered many of the 2800 Pearl Harbor casualties, and feelings were running very high. In later years Warren apparently had regrets for the harshness of the action, realizing in a calmer time that many of the internees were loyal to the United States. This can be judged somewhat from the statement (series entry 265) regarding the reemployment of persons of Japanese ancestry following the war, and the file on the trip the governor made to Japan in 1951 (series entry 241) ostensibly to cheer the California National Guard troops that had been "federalized" for combat service in Korea, but equally to demonstrate that California no longer harbored ill feelings for the Japanese people.

The "loyalty oath" controversy involving University of California professors is covered in series entry 343. Others of the papers will document for the researcher the organization of Warren's campaigns for the governorship (series entries 6-8) and the Presidency (series entries 9-10); the "hot cargo" issue (series entry 6); health insurance (series entry 477); the post-war building program (series entries 308-309); the treaty with Mexico allocating 1,500,000 acre-feet of Colorado River water to that country, and the efforts of California to block it (series entry 49); the records and recommendations of his statewide conferences of citizens; and his messages to the legislature.

But by and large there is not much exciting material in the Warren Papers. Much of the material in the Warren Papers is in fact of a merely routine character. There were no scandals in the administration of this very careful, thoughtful and high-minded man. There were no "shake-ups," no legislative investigations of Warren appointees. His administration was honest and it ran smoothly.

Meanwhile, starting a number of years before the Warren Papers were made available to the public, the Regional Oral History Office at the University of California, Berkeley, has had an oral history project covering Earl Warren's public career in California. Consisting of the recollections of most of the people associated with him then, it is a comprehensive story of this important epoch. Warren himself was interviewed twice by the ROHO staff.

Somewhat of a body of literature has also been produced. Warren especially liked the books written by John D. Weaver and Leo Katcher. He paid me the compliment of saying he enjoyed the articles I wrote about him in the Sacramento "Bee" from 1969 to 1973.

Introduction

The Earl Warren Papers are the first major collection of a California governor's administrative and personal papers to be deposited in the State Archives. Except for provisions covering specific classes of records—original laws, proclamations, pardons, commutations, and reprieves, extraditions, etc.—California has no legal provisions requiring the Governor to deposit his papers in the State Archives or elsewhere. The lack of such provisions has meant every Governor from Peter H.
Burnett to Ronald Reagan, with the exceptions of Warren and Goodwin J. Knight, has taken his papers with him upon leaving office. Of these only a half dozen major collections and a number of other smaller collections have survived or found their way into manuscript depositories.

The accession of the Warren Papers was a result of the efforts of Frank M. Jordan, Secretary of State. On September 29, 1953 Jordan wrote to Warren, “You will recall that some time ago we discussed the question of securing for the Archives all of the official records of the Governor so that they may become available to students and other persons interested in research of the history of the State of California.” On September 30 President Dwight D. Eisenhower announced the appointment of Warren as Chief Justice of the United States Supreme Court, thereby setting in motion the machinery which led to the deposit of the Warren Papers in the State Archives.

Warren responded to Jordan’s letter on October 1 by confirming his intentions of transmitting to the Secretary of State records accumulated during his tenure as Governor and as Attorney General. In the same letter Warren included the following instructions:

“If I do not ask them returned within ten years from this date then and in that event you are at liberty to place these files in the State Archives.... In the event of my death during such ten year period you have similar authority with regard to the disposition of the files.”

Warren concluded by stipulating that the files were to remain sealed during the restricted period.

The actual transfer occurred on October 4, 1953. Paul J. O'Brien, State Archivist, receipted for the records contained in 295 legal file drawers and 34 pieces (not otherwise described) which had been stored in a commercial warehouse. Warren left California for Washington, D.C. on the same day in time to be sworn in and preside at the opening of the Supreme Court on the following day.

In May, 1954, the Warren Papers were transferred from the metal filing equipment into cardboard boxes to free the former for more pressing storage needs. Each box was sealed with the seal of the Secretary of State. For the next nine years the Warren Papers remained untouched in accordance with the provisions of the letter of transfer. The collection in its interim form amounted to a small mountain of 630 boxes, each holding approximately one cubic foot of records.

In mid-1963, with the original 10 year closure period about to lapse, the Archives formulated plans to begin the task of processing the Warren Papers. On October 2, 1963, however, Warren addressed a note to Secretary of State Frank M. Jordan requesting that his records "be continued under seal during my lifetime or unless notified otherwise at a future date.”

Secretary of State Jordan acknowledged Warren’s letter on October 11 and included a request that the State Archives be allowed to process the records. On June 1, 1965 Warren authorized the processing of his records. At the same time he disclosed the reasons for closing his records.

“As you will remember, I left the Governorship on four days notice, and did not have an opportunity to see any of the papers which were sent to the Archives. As you know, in a Governor’s Office, there is often correspondence that could be injurious to some of the people mentioned, and I would not want to have my gubernatorial records used to stir up political strife or controversy or to injure any person. It is for this reason and that reason alone that I would not want to make the papers public at this time.”

In late 1965 the compiler of this inventory was assigned the responsibility of arranging and cataloging the Warren Papers. The first task was to determine the major record groupings and to devise a plan for their arrangement. The initial survey disclosed five major sub-groups:

1. Political: campaign records covering the period 1926-50, including Warren’s campaigns for reelection as Alameda County District Attorney, his activities with the Republican State Central Committee and Republican National Committee, the State Attorney General campaign of 1938, the Gubernatorial campaigns of 1942, 1946, 1950, and the Presidential Campaign of 1948.
3. Governor’s Office - Administrative Files, 1943-53.
4. Governor’s Office - Legislative Files, 1943-53.
5. Governor’s Office - Federal Files, 1943-53.

Also included were small collections of personal and Masonic papers indicating the possible existence of additional Warren Papers that had not been turned over to the State Archives.

The original survey and processing, including the elimination of duplicate and unwanted records and printed materials generally available in the State Library, occupied approximately 3½ years of part-time work. The net reduction amounted to approximately 36% of the total records received. A rough inventory was produced and forwarded in March, 1972 to Chief Justice Warren, retired, in hope that Warren would write a statement on his papers for inclusion in the final inventory. The hope was not fulfilled.

In mid-1972, as a result of a phone conversation between Chief of Archives W. N. Davis, Jr. and Warren's office, the Archives learned of the existence of Warren's Personal Papers for the period 1927-53. The papers had been stored in Sacramento since October, 1953 and because of the high storage costs the question of transferring them to the State Archives was raised. On August 1, 1972 Warren authorized the Chief of Archives to examine the papers and to determine which should be transferred to the State Archives. A preliminary survey was made in early September and a decision made to accession the entire collection to the State Archives. These records, amounting to 170 cubic feet and approximately 27 linear feet of scrapbooks were received into the Archives on September 7. A more detailed analysis followed and recommendations on specific dispositions submitted to Warren on December 1.

Warren's Personal Papers, after thorough analysis and processing, were revealed to be a mixture of personal, political, and administrative papers. The mixture is explained by the fact of the very brief period of time that was available to the Governor's staff to separate the two collections before they were sent to either the Archives or commercial storage. In the processing of the Personal Papers rearrangement and additional description of many series entries were required. This is particularly true of Warren's political files for a considerable overlap existed between the two collections. In addition the Personal Papers contained documentation on the 1952 Presidential campaign which was not found among records in the first transfer. A few classes of records were removed from the collection and disposed of because of their personal nature. These included Masonic papers, personal financial records such as bank statements and cancelled checks, and a few private family records.

For purposes of description the Earl Warren Papers are arranged by series entries. 2. Title of Series.
3. Date span of series.
4. Quantity of records, expressed in terms of the number of file folders, volumes, or cubic feet.
5. Series identification numbers.

The series title is followed by a descriptive paragraph and includes:

477. HEALTH INSURANCE FILE. 1945-50. F3640

Physical Description: 2cf.

Scope and Content Note

Arrangement

Arranged by subject by legislative session.

A major program Warren unsuccessfully sought passage of during his tenure as Governor was a compulsory health insurance program. Warren's particular interest stemmed from his hospitalization in mid-1944 from a kidney infection. In each of the following five years Warren included health insurance as part of his legislative program. A number of bills were introduced but without success due to widespread opposition led by the California Medical Association.

This series includes accumulated materials gathered from various sources from within the Governor's Office and organized by A. D. Studybaker. The materials cover the period 1933-52 but primarily relate to the major attempts to gain passage of legislation between 1945 and 1949. The series includes bills introduced, Warren's speeches, analyses of legislative measures, correspondence with legislators, correspondence received and sent with doctors, organizations, and individuals supporting or opposing compulsory health insurance, and general reference and background materials. The materials as organized by Studybaker are described as being incomplete and no effort was made to locate pertinent materials from other files.
