Biography
Willie Lewis Brown, Jr. was born March 20, 1934 in Minneola, Texas and became one of California’s most influential politicians. He graduated from San Francisco State College in 1955 and received a Juris Doctor degree from Hastings College of the Law in 1958. Brown was in private practice when he was elected to represent the 18th Assembly District (Democrat, San Francisco; later represented the 17th and 13th ADs) in the California Assembly in 1965. He served as Speaker from 1980 to 1995, a record term and the first African American in that role. He enjoyed a powerful long tenure, raising significant money for his fellow Democrats. Brown is married to the former Blanche Vitero. He has four children.

Brown was elected San Francisco's 41st mayor on December 12, 1995, in a runoff with the incumbent, Frank Jordan. Brown was the city's first African American mayor. He served two terms, from Jan. 8, 1996 to Jan. 8, 2004, and he oversaw San Francisco's most diverse administration, including the first Asian American police chief, and first African American fire and police chiefs. In 1996 he signed the Equal Benefits Ordinance requiring city contractors to provide domestic partner benefits to their employees, the first such law in the country.

In his first days in office, he abolished Jordan's Matrix program which cracked down on street crimes such as public sleeping, camping, and drinking. His homeless policy included new shelters, supportive housing, job training, and drug treatment centers. However, quality of life issues and widespread homelessness persisted.

Long associated with developers as an assemblyman, Mayor Brown moved large-scale development projects forward including condominium buildings, the airport's new International Terminal, the Port, and the City's newest neighborhood, Mission Bay, which became home to the University of California, San Francisco's biotechnology campus. A privately-financed downtown baseball stadium measure was approved by voters in 1996; the San Francisco Giants played their first game there in April of 2000. In 1995 City Hall underwent a 4-year, $300 million seismic retrofit and restoration. The mayor also signed an agreement with the U.S. Navy to clean up and transfer the formal Hunters Point Naval Shipyard. San Francisco's economy was marked by the dot-com boom of the late 1990s, marked by gentrification and soaring housing prices; followed by the crash of 2001. Tourism and the growth of Internet technology, called Web 2.0, brought economic recovery by 2003. Brown increased the city budget to $5.2 billion, adding 4000 employees. Notably, on Jan. 1, 2001, San Francisco became the second California county to offer nearly universal health coverage for children.

Brown was easily re-elected in the December 1999 runoff over write-in candidate, Supervisor Tom Ammiano. He had made numerous appointments to the Board of Supervisors. However, a number of his allies on the board were defeated in the reinstated district elections held in the fall of 2000. The mayor had an acrimonious time with the new board; he did not attend their meetings.

Upon leaving office, he said, "There's nothing that compares to my eight years as mayor of San Francisco. It's been an incredible ride." He continues to be at the center of California politics and government as a political adviser. He created and heads the Willie L. Brown, Jr. Institute on Politics and Public Service. Brown released an autobiography, Basic Brown: My Life and Our Times, and is a columnist with the San Francisco Chronicle and a political commentator. In 2013, the western span of the San Francisco-Oakland Bay Bridge was renamed in his honor.

Scope and Contents

This collection documents the mayoral career of Willie L. Brown, Jr., who served as Mayor of San Francisco from 1996 to 2004. Materials include departmental, commission, and task force reports and correspondence, budget summaries, notes, constituent correspondence, speaking notes, press conferences, press releases, newspaper clippings, and photographs. Speech text is not included as the mayor was known to speak without written scripts. Little of his mayoral campaigns is included. Subjects include Hunters Point Shipyard, Live/Work Units, Tenancies-in-Common, Mission Bay, Open Door Days, District Elections, JDeceaux Toilets, Golden Gate Park Garage, and War Protest.
