Project History
The "Indian Diaspora Oral History Project" was part of a larger project called the "Indian Diaspora Project." It was conducted by Dr. Rajiv Khanna of the Department of History at San Jose State University as Oral History Lead with the help of Matt Bell as Oral History Coordinator. It was sponsored by the Silicon Valley Center for Global Innovation and Immigration (SVCGII), part of SJSU Global Studies (now known as the Silicon Valley Center for Global Studies). For this research project, Dr. Rajiv Khanna interviewed fourteen Indian immigrants who arrived in the California Bay Area from the 1940s to the 1960s and videotaped these interviews. In the interviews, these immigrants speak about their journey to the United States, family, professional life, education, and social and cultural experiences.
Scope and Content of Collection
The material in this collection documents the stories of fourteen Indian immigrants who arrived in the California Bay Area from the 1940s to the 1960s. This includes their journey to the United States, family, professional life, education, and social and cultural experiences.
