Biographical/Historical Note

Elisabeth Jastrow was born into an assimilated Jewish, academic family in Berlin on October 7, 1890. Her father, Ignaz Jastrow, was an economist, historian and professor of political science at the University of Berlin, as well as one of the founders, and later the Rector, of the Berliner Handelshochschule. Through her father's position, the family was part of the cosmopolitan world of intellectualism and salons that flourished in Berlin at this time, and the family moved within a circle of noted artists and scholars in the humanities and social sciences.

Elisabeth's scholarly interests, however, focused on the ancient world. Beginning in 1909, she studied Greek and Roman archaeology, Classical philology, art history and philosophy at the University of Berlin. The death of her professor, George Loeschcke, in 1915 led her to shift her studies to the University of Heidelberg from which she received her doctorate in 1916 with a dissertation on arulae, or terracotta altars, from Magna Grecia. During this time she was part of a group of art historians and archaeologists centered around Margarete Bieber; a group which included Gerhart Rodenwaldt, Valentin Müller, Erwin Panofsky, Walther Amelung, and Bernhard Schweitzer, among others.

In the years after completing her degree, Jastrow held several positions in archaeology and museum work. From 1916 to 1922 Jastrow first worked with the Archaeological Seminar of the University of Leipzig and then in the departments of Archaeology and the History of Art at the University of Giessen. From 1922 to 1924 Jastrow took an extended study trip to Athens, where she supported herself by working intermittently with the German Archaeological Institute and the German School of Athens. She then moved on to Rome, where from 1925 to the spring of 1929, Jastrow was one of the collaborators working on the Realkatalog, the massive catalog of the holdings of the library of the German Archaeological Institute (DAI) in Rome. Returning to Berlin in 1929, Jastrow worked briefly with the German Archaeological Institute in Berlin and then moved on to the Archaeological Seminary at the University of Marburg until early 1933. Jastrow left Marburg, having accepted an appointment to catalog the collection of Greek vases at the Akademisches Kunst-Museum and Archaeological Seminary at the University of Bonn. This position was to begin in May 1933, but before she could start, the restrictive legislation of April 1933 barred her from this job, and essentially any other in her field in Germany.

Fortunately for Jastrow, at just this time in the United States the American Association of University Women (AAUW), growing concerned with the situation in Germany, began devoting their resources to aiding displaced German scholars. Jastrow received an International Fellowship from the AAUW for the academic year 1934/1935. This funding allowed her to resume her research on terracottas and begin revising her dissertation for publication, and more importantly, it allowed her to leave Germany. Jastrow based herself in Italy, but also traveled to Greece and the United States. Further funding supplied by Hetty Goldman allowed Jastrow to continue her work after the AAUW fellowship ended. Her father's death in May 1937 brought Jastrow back to Germany, but she found, after spending time settling his affairs, that her return to Italy had become problematic. So leaving Germany again, Jastrow went first to Switzerland and then in October 1938 to the United States, where she officially immigrated in June 1939 with a non-quota visa.

Jastrow arrived in the United States with limited economic resources but with the expectation that she could avail herself of a network of connections. The family had earlier established an academic beachhead in the United States through her cousins, Marcus, Morris and Joseph Jastrow. Indeed, calling on the help of family, German friends who had emigrated earlier, such as Margarete Bieber, and American friends of her father, such as Frank Taussig, Jastrow was able to settle first in New York and then in the Boston area. She initially supported herself with a variety of pick-up jobs: translating, teaching German, doing museum photography and selling sculptural casts. Her new visa status in 1939, however, opened the possibility of better employment. She first held a one-year position as an instructor and lecturer at the Museum of Fine Arts, Boston. Then Jastrow was offered a contract position beginning January 1941 to teach art history at the Women's College of the University of North Carolina at Greensboro.

Jastrow's initial trial period in Greensboro was successful and in the Fall of 1941, she was appointed as an Assistant Professor in the Department of Art, where she taught the entire range of art history courses. Jastrow's feelings about her years in Greensboro appear to have been rather conflicted. On the one hand, she knew that she was very fortunate to have escaped Germany and to have received a faculty appointment in the United States. But on the other hand, she chafed at the heavy course load, the low pay, the inadequacies of the library, the weather and what she saw as the social and intellectual isolation of Greensboro. Her research interests were subsumed by teaching duties. Jastrow was an archaeologist, not an art historian, and she spent enormous amounts of time preparing her courses, the majority of which were outside her normal scope, and trying to acquire the necessary visual materials for her classes. Jastrow also tried to supplement her low salary by moonlighting. She gave private German and Italian lessons and continued doing sculptural commissions. Jastrow also continued working on the expanded version of her dissertation as her teaching duties and finances allowed. Her correspondence makes clear her disappointment with her situation. She coped by leaving Greensboro during vacations, whenever she was able, for the research facilities and cosmopolitan offerings of New York, Boston and other cities. Yet, Jastrow would remain in Greensboro until her retirement from the Women's College in 1961 and beyond.

At the same time Jastrow was settling into a new life in the United States, a great deal of her energy focused on getting her mother out of Germany. Jastrow and her sister, Lotte Beate Jastrow Hahn, who had already left Germany for England and then the United States, gradually convinced their mother that she must emigrate as well. Anna Seligmann Jastrow finally left Germany for Cuba in October 1941. After a long delay in Havana, Anna arrived in July 1942, and she lived in Greensboro with Elisabeth until her death in August 1943. In December 1944, Elisabeth Jastrow became an American citizen.

When Jastrow retired from the Women's College in 1961, she turned to travel and research. She again devoted herself to the study of arulae and worked on her research and manuscript. By 1970, Jastrow had moved into the Maryfield Nursing Home outside Greensboro, where she remained until her death in September 1981.

Scope and Content of Collection

The Elisabeth Jastrow papers document the life and scholarship of this émigré archaeologist who left Germany due to the anti-Semitic policies of the Third Reich. Jastrow's papers both preserve a rich source source of data from a lifetime's research in Greek archaeology and bear witness to her experiences as one of generation of German scholars who would see their lives altered in previously unimaginable ways by the events of the first half of the twentieth century. Indirectly documented here is the impact of larger events -- World War I, the changes in the status of Jews and women in German academia, the exclusionary and destructive policies of the Third Reich, the stress of exile, and the full disclosure of the Holocaust -- that played themselves out on the life and career of an individual scholar.

Elisabeth Jastrow's correspondence, which documents both the personal and professional aspects of her life, comprises a significant portion of the archive. Professionally, Jastrow carried on a voluminous and substantive correspondence with the leading classical archaeologists of her day, relating both to her specific research on terracottas and to general news of the archaeological world. Equally significant, however, is the more personal aspect. Reaction to the policies of Nazi Germany resonates throughout the correspondence from the 1930s and 1940s, even within her professional exchanges, chronicling the shock of people who had believed themselves insulated from such catastrophe.

Jastrow's professional life is further documented by her research and writings, her teaching materials from the University of North Carolina, Greensboro, and miscellaneous professional papers. Her research and writings, the largest portion of her papers, include a comprehensive study of terracotta altars (arulae) in the Greek colonies in southern Italy and Sicily. Beginning with her unpublished dissertation and continuing through a lifetime of research on the topic, Jastrow amassed material for the publication of the definitive catalog and analysis of this object type. In the end, Jastrow was never able to publish her comprehensive work, and the topic has subsequently been treated by Hellebora van der Meijden in Terrakotta-Arulae aus Sizilien und Unteritalien (Amsterdam: Verlag Adolf Hakkert, 1993), yet Jastrow's manuscripts and notes still contain large quantities of raw data and photographic documentation important for the study of arulae.

The final section of the archive comprises Elisabeth Jastrow's personal papers. Among the personal papers, two elements particularly stand out. The first of these are materials relating to her father, Ignaz Jastrow, a noted economist and historian. The second again returns to the role of Jastrow as a refugee from the Third Reich. Preserved here are the materials from Jastrow's twenty-four years of legal proceedings against Germany for restitution and compensation for the damages inflicted on her family by the Nazis.

Series I. Correspondence, 1911-1967, bulk 1934-1962

Physical Description: 4.8 linear feet(12 boxes)

Scope and Content Note

This series contains circa 3400 letters and related items, including telegrams, postcards, notes, greeting cards, photographs and drawings, exchanged with circa 480 correspondents. Although items received by Jastrow form the bulk of the material, her side of the correspondence is also well represented by drafts and copies of her outgoing letters.

Found here is a wide range of correspondents, both professional and personal: her archaeological colleagues, an assortment of German émigrés in various academic fields, students and fellow professors from Greensboro, as well as Jastrow's family and longtime friends. The professional correspondence centers on Jastrow's research on arulae and demonstrates her ties within the archaeological community. The personal letters provide a glimpse of Jastrow's conflicted feelings over her new life in America. They document her attempts to obtain a better teaching position, her financial struggles to fund her research and standard of living and her feelings of intellectual isolation in Greensboro. They also reveal the extent to which Jastrow frequently turned to the resources of New York City for the personal details of her life, from medical care to shopping.

The correspondence in this series is arranged alphabetically by correspondent and then chronologically. Letters received from and sent to unidentified correspondents are placed at the end of the series, as are isolated invitations and announcements received by Jastrow. A brief description of the general nature of the exchange is included for each correspondent, with the exception of those in which the handwriting is illegible. Correspondence relating to Jastrow's restitution claims after the war is found below in Series V.

Series II. Research and writings, 1874-1966, bulk 1916-1960*Physical Description: 15.8 linear feet(28 boxes, 2 flat file folders)Scope and Content Note

This series contains Jastrow's research and writings, including unpublished manuscripts, materials related to her published articles, research project reports and lectures, as well as her original research materials on arulae. In 1916 Jastrow wrote her dissertation on terracotta arulae from the Greek colonies in southern Italy and Sicily. This topic and related issues of other forms of mold-made terracottas would remain the core of Jastrow's research, with only brief asides for minor research in other areas. Jastrow's passion for this single topic led her to form a comprehensive resource for the study of arulae.

Two unpublished manuscripts on arulae form the initial portion of this series. These manuscripts include Jastrow's original dissertation, which she was unable to publish during World War I and its aftermath, and an expanded reworking of the topic, the product primarily of Jastrow's AAUW fellowship. Both of these manuscripts, as well as other notes and references in her correspondence, indicate that Jastrow was revising and adding material as late as 1966.

Jastrow's research materials form the largest and final portion of the series. These include inventory cards, notes, a concordance, and comparanda, as well as a group of offprints specifically related to her arula research. The extensive card file inventory provides data for each arula known to Jastrow, often including current location, provenance, measurements, bibliography, photographs and drawings. This data is further supplemented by Jastrow's more general notes and her collection of comparanda. The photographic documentation is particularly rich, with over 1300 photographs of arulae and almost 500 photographs of stylistic and iconographic comparanda.

Box 19-27	Inventory cards, undated Scope and Content Note The organization of the inventory cards presented here retains Jastrow's arrangement and box labeling. There are two sets of cards. Four boxes labeled "A-D" appear to represent Jastrow's active research, while two boxes labeled "Old Reference Notes A-B" represent an earlier stage. The arrangement of the cards in Boxes A, B and the early portion of Box C roughly follows the section headings of Jastrow's "Tonaltärchen" manuscript. The cards in the later portion of Box C and the early portion of Box D are organized by Dressel numbers, whereas the later portion of Box D is organized by current holding institution. At the beginning of each box, there is some out of place material, presumably meant to be properly filed at a later point.

Scope and Content Note

Elisabeth Jastrow's teaching materials from her tenure at the Women's College of the University of North Carolina, Greensboro comprise this series. Lecture notes for Jastrow's courses form the first portion of the series. Included here are texts for her lectures, completely written out for the most part, as well as some supplementary material. The second portion of the series contains the visual material, both study prints and slides, used by Jastrow for her classes. Very little of the material in this series is specifically dated, but the majority can be roughly dated to the period from 1941 to 1961.

Series IV. Miscellaneous professional papers, 1884-1967

Physical Description: 2.7 linear feet(7 boxes)

Scope and Content Note

This series contains a range of Jastrow's miscellaneous professional papers. The majority of the material consists of offprints, clippings and other printed matter, which Jastrow accumulated over the years of her archaeological career. Of particular interest in this series, however, is the documentation of Jastrow's sculptural work, the other element of her professional life.

Series V. Personal papers, 1870-1971

Physical Description: 9.0 linear feet(11 boxes, 1 flat file folder)

Scope and Content Note

Four main groups of material comprise Elisabeth Jastrow's personal papers. These include papers relating to her parents, Ignaz Jastrow and Anna Seligmann Jastrow, to her legal claims for restitution and compensation after the war, and finally her general personal papers.

Ignaz Jastrow (1856-1937) was a noted economist and historian. Preserved here are both material from his lifetime, such as copies of his letters and daybooks, and posthumous material. The latter represents Elisabeth dealing with her father's estate, such as the inventory of his library, as well as with publishers and authors in an effort to maintain her father's scholarly legacy. Anna Seligmann Jastrow immigrated to the United States in 1942 and lived with Elisabeth until her death in 1943. Her papers as preserved here are predominantly letters from that short interval, as well as a small amount of earlier correspondence and family material which she brought with her to America.

In January 1947, Jastrow initiated legal proceedings involving claims against Germany for restitution and compensation. The claims, which were based on her father's and mother's estates, included property, bank accounts and securities, discriminatory fees and taxation, withholding of royalties and pension payments. The proceedings slowly worked their way through the system over the next two decades to meet with only mixed success.

Jastrow's general personal papers include a wide range of material. The majority of these papers relate to her emigration from Germany and to financial matters, but items such as personal photographs, lists of Christmas gifts, and address and birthday books are also present.
