Scope and Content of Collection

William Patrick Clark, Jr. was a close associate of Ronald Reagan, whom he served during Reagan's terms both as Governor of California and as President of the United States. Clark grew up in Ventura County, California, where his father was a rancher and where his family had been pioneer settlers. Although he never graduated from college or from law school, Clark did pass the California state bar examination and began practice as a lawyer. His papers at the Hoover Institution Archives, acquired in 2016, are arranged according to periods of his life. Aside from two photographs the collection includes nothing from his pre-government life.

The California Governor's Office File documents Clark's first government service. Clark's involvement in Reagan's successful 1966 gubernatorial campaign led to the acquaintanceship of the two men and the development of a relationship that observers of Reagan characterized as exceptionally close. Clark was initially appointed Cabinet Secretary to the Governor when Reagan went to Sacramento, but was soon promoted to Executive Secretary to replace Philip Battaglia. The file covers the work of the Governor's Office during the first years of the Reagan governorship from 1967 to 1969, and the circumstances of Battaglia's departure.

Clark resigned from the Governor's Office in 1969 in order to accept a judicial appointment. This was the first of three successive appointments of Clark by Reagan, each at a higher level, that ultimately brought Clark to a seat on the California Supreme Court. Altogether he served twelve years (1969-1981) in a judicial capacity and ever afterwards was known as Judge Clark. This period of Clark's life is documented in the California Judicial File. The state Supreme Court was unusually contentious during the time of Clark's service and was often polarized between a liberal faction headed by Chief Justice Rose Bird (an appointee of Governor Jerry Brown) and a conservative faction of which Clark was a member. There is in particular a large quantity of material on the much-publicized case of People vs. Tanner (1978), in which the Court initially overturned a new state law mandating a prison sentence for use of a gun during the commission of a crime, and subsequently reversed itself.

When Reagan became President in 1981, he brought Clark to Washington, appointing him Deputy Secretary of State despite his lack of background in foreign affairs. Clark served under Secretary of State Alexander Haig and was often seen as a balance to Haig and as a man whose personal loyalty to the President was unquestioned. The appointment, which for the first time familiarized Clark with the international world of diplomacy, lasted for almost exactly one year. It is documented in the United States Department of State File.

Clark's next position, documented in the United States National Security Council File, was as National Security Adviser. Clark succeeded Richard V. Allen in this capacity in early 1982 and served almost two years, until November 1983. (Allen's papers are also in the Hoover Institution Archives.) Clark was generally seen as a voice for a hard-line foreign policy vis-a-vis the Soviet Union in the Reagan administration. This file, like the preceding one and the succeeding one, contains unclassified documents retained by Clark for personal use rather than official documents.

Clark's resignation as National Security Adviser in order to accept an appointment as Secretary of the Interior came as a surprise to most Washington observers. His final period of government service is documented in the United States Department of the Interior File. Clark's background as a Westerner and as an outdoorsman gave him considerable familiarity with many of the issues dealt with by this department. Clark served in this capacity for more than a year. Following Reagan's re-election and second inauguration, Clark resigned in February 1985 to leave government service and return to the private sector.

The Post-Government Service File documents the longest period of Clark's life and unsurprisingly is the largest series of the collection. Clark initially joined the prestigious Washington law firm of Rogers and Wells as a part-time member, while simultaneously founding his own business consultant firm, the Clark Company. The Business Records sub-series documents his activities in both, which made use of the foreign contacts he had made and the knowledge of government regulatory agencies he had acquired. This sub-series reflects an interest in Iraqi oil continuing throughout the 1980s and 1990s, seen in several places and especially in the Iraq/Aqaba Pipeline Project proposal for a pipeline from the oilfields of Iraq to the port of Aqaba in Jordan. Also of interest is the proposal of the U.S. Three Gorges Working Group, a consortium of American companies, for a hydroelectric project on the Yangtze River in the People's Republic of China. The Subject File sub-series includes retrospective assessments of the Reagan presidential administration. It also reflects Clark's identity as a Catholic and as a social conservative, and especially his activity in opposing legalized abortion. Through 1990 Clark maintained the practice he had established in 1981 of separate alphabetical correspondence files for each year.

The Audiovisual File is especially notable for its photographs of Clark with Reagan and with other dignitaries. Most of these photographs are of professional quality.
