Soviet dissident; subsequently emigre in the United States.

Scope and Content of Collection

The Irina Korsunsky papers contain correspondence, clippings, and photographs related to civil liberties in the Soviet Union. Irina Korsunky (also known as Irina Korsunasky) was active in the dissident movement. She wrote letters to political prisoners, sent them food and books, and accommodated them in her Moscow apartment as they traveled home from exile. She would also house family members of prisoners who came to visit those in camps. Korsunsky was interrogated several times by the KGB officers. In 1981, Korsunsky and her family were forced to emigrate. They settled in the United States.
