Historical Note
The Citizens for Reagan organization originated from a strong belief of some of his supporters that Ronald Reagan should be persuaded to run for the Republican nomination for president in 1976, becoming Reagan's official campaign committee for the 1976 election. A committee was formed for that purpose with Senator Paul Laxalt, former governor of Nevada, as its chairman. The goal of this committee was to set up an organization to lead an effective political campaign and raise money needed to conduct a successful campaign in the event of the announcement of Ronald Reagan's candidacy for the president of the United States.
In addition to Paul Laxalt, other prominent members of the Republican Party decided to signify their support of Ronald Reagan's candidacy. John P. Sears, a Washington attorney, was chosen to serve as the executive vice-chairman. Other office holders included Jack Courtimanche of Los Angeles to be in charge of financial operations; Loren Smith as legal counsel; Jeffrey Bell as head of research; Henry M. Buchanan as treasurer; and David Keene as the southern states coordinator. Other prominent members were former governor of Kentucky Louis B. Nunn; former California Republican National Committeewoman Mrs. Stanlope C. Ring; retired congressman H. R. Gross of Iowa; and Nebraska insurance executive George Cook. Jim Lake, David Keene, and Lyn Nofziger represented political staff.
Citizens for Reagan had a centralized administrative structure with state offices. All handbills, rally notices and other materials included a notation such as "paid for by the CFR." Each local unit had a chairman and a treasurer at all times, possibly a bookkeeper as well. All local contributions to Citizens for Reagan or to the local subdivision were sent to Washington, D.C. to be deposited. The Washington office also authorized all expenditures.

All activities were carried out on a state-by-state basis using a detailed list of state-level coordinators, members, and addresses. Although the 1976 presidential election results did not fulfill Ronald Reagan's political ambition, the operating procedures and organizational structure used in the Citizens for Reagan operations of 1975-1976, the organizational experience successfully supported his later political ambitions.

Scope and Content of Collection

Citizens for Reagan records are a document the process leading up to Ronald Reagan's bid for the Republican Party presidential nomination in 1976, which he lost to Gerald Ford at the convention. The materials include correspondence, position papers, press releases, memoranda, public opinion polling data, financial records, sound recordings, and video tapes. They reveal elaborate planning, organization, publicity, preparation, and advertisement required to launch a political campaign. The papers are arranged in their original order, with the original folder titles and organizational system devised by the Citizens for Reagan office staff.

Defense, 1976 January 22, 30 seconds, 1 videotape

Scope and Contents note
This ad opens with an unidentified man in the audience asking Reagan about cuts in defense spending. From the podium, Reagan tells the audience that the US must never be second to anyone else in the world in military power. This television commercial for the 1976 Ronald Reagan presidential campaign aired around January 22, 1976.

Sequence: Slate (00:26), opens to audience member asking question (00:37). Dropout and banding as on original tape.

On shelf

Government, 1976 January 22, 60 seconds, 1 videotape

Scope and Contents note
While Reagan steps to the podium a narrator provides an introduction, stating that Reagan recently gave a group of citizens his views on the role of government. Speaking to the audience, Reagan declares that Washington politicians are slow to catch on to the reawakening of the American spirit of independence and self reliance. He calls for a government that's confident in what people can do for themselves. This television commercial for the 1976 Ronald Reagan presidential campaign aired around January 22, 1976.

Sequence: Slate (00:34), Reagan steps to podium as narration begins (00:44). Audible edge damage on the audio track.
Gun Control, 1976 January 22, 30 seconds, 1 videotape

Scope and Contents note

This is an excerpt from a live audience event with Reagan at the podium. An unidentified woman in the audience asks a question about gun control, and Reagan replies. He does not wish to disarm honest citizens and leave the others armed.

Sequence: Slate (00:35), woman asks question and Reagan replies (00:47), "Reagan" slate (01:11), black (01:18).

Inflation, 1976 January 22, 30 seconds, 1 videotape

Scope and Contents note

This ad opens to Reagan speaking to an audience. After pointing to years of runaway inflation, he calls for the federal government to balance the budget so that people will know that a dollar next month will buy as much as it did last month. This television commercial for the 1976 Ronald Reagan presidential campaign aired around January 22, 1976.

Sequence: Slate (00:56), Reagan at podium (01:06).

Social Security, 1976 January 22, 60 seconds, 1 videotape

Scope and Contents note

This ad opens to an audience listening to Ronald Reagan, who talks from the stage about Social Security. He asserts that any reform to the program must have as its first priority a guarantee that those who depend on Social Security will continue to receive monthly benefits that keep pace with inflation. He goes on to call for a balanced budget. This television commercial for the 1976 Ronald Reagan presidential campaign aired around January 22, 1976.

Sequence: Slate (00:47), opens to audience listening to Reagan (01:00). Lines of dropout in image due to scratches on original tape.

Taxes, 1976 January 22, 30 seconds, 1 videotape

Scope and Contents note

As Ronald Reagan covers a smile and steps away from the podium a narrator announces that this happened at one of Reagan's citizen press conferences. A boy in the audience says that he thinks taxes should be lower because the money doesn't get to good use. Back at the podium, Reagan tells the boy he's talking sense, and that government at all levels takes too great a percentage of people's earnings. This television commercial for the 1976 Ronald Reagan presidential campaign aired around January 22, 1976.

Sequence: Slate (00:49), opens to Reagan covering a smile on stage (01:02).

Unemployment, 1976 January 22, 60 seconds, 1 videotape

Scope and Contents note

The 60 second version of this campaign ad (part 1) begins with an unidentified audience member asking Reagan, at the podium, what Reagan would do to reduce the persistent 8 percent unemployment. Reagan replies the elimination of inflation is the only answer. In the 30 second version (part 2), an audience member identifies himself and asks Reagan for his plan for full employment. Reagan replies that ending deficit spending and balancing the budget is the answer. These television commercials for the 1976 Ronald Reagan presidential campaign aired around January 22, 1976.

Sequence: PART 1 (60 second version): Slate (00:44), man asks question (00:53), Reagan replies (01:06). PART 2 (30 second version): Slate (00:50), man asks question (01:04), Reagan replies (01:14).

Scope and Contents note

This ad opens to Reagan at the podium of an event at the Wilmington Hilton. He declares that the Canal Zone is US territory, asserting that it is essential to Western Hemisphere defense and that the world is safer with the US operating the canal. This television commercial for the 1976 Ronald Reagan presidential campaign aired around March 2, 1976.

Sequence: Slate (00:52), open to Reagan at podium (01:03).

Scope and Contents note

These three campaign ads feature Ronald Reagan sitting in a chair in what appears to be a living room. They were taped on April 27, 1976.

In "Little Girl," Reagan talks about the question a little girl asked him about why he wanted to be president. He tried to answer her, but did not realize until later what he should have said. Reagan wished he had told her that he wants to see if he can "make this country again as free for a little six year old to grow up in as it was when I was six years old growing up in America."

The "Sure Way" ad is very short; the entirety is Reagan saying, "The one sure way to guarantee world peace is to restore our defense superiority. That's real peace through strength."

In "Social Security." Reagan explains how he differs from Gerald Ford on social security. Ford wants to preserve the integrity of social security, whereas Reagan wants to restore its integrity.

Sequence: Little Girl slate (00:29), opens to Reagan (00:48), Reagan closing message (01:41), black (01:50), Sure Way slate (01:58), opens to Reagan (02:18), Reagan closing message (02:26), Social Security slate (02:39), opens to Reagan (02:59), Reagan closing message (03:54).

Scope and Contents note

In this video recording Reagan speaks while sitting at a desk in a staged setting. Reagan discusses his disagreements with policies of the Gerald Ford administration. He concludes by stating he wants to go to Washington so that he can "see this country become once again... the kind of country--the free country--that you and I grew up in."

Sequence: slates (00:51), Reagan begins speaking (01:13), Reagan concludes, closing slate (28:10), black (28:20).

Scope and Contents note

In a staged setting without an audience, Reagan talks at a podium about security and defense issues, which he believes are beyond politics. The Soviets are ahead of the US in the arms race, and the Ford and Kissinger leadership must be held accountable. The "delusions of detente" are contradictory with a genuine peace, and the Ford/Kissinger peace is a "peace of the grave."
