"Symposium on Effective Schools" 1990

Scope and Content note
In 1990 a congressional staff member, working for the Democratic majority, undertook to design a symposium on effective schools to demonstrate the important contribution of federal funding in stimulating school improvement. A planning committee of education groups was formed, including AERA, papers were written by scholars and practitioners, a conference was held, and a Committee Report was issued.

Education First Alliance 1994-1996

Scope and Content note
Beginning after the congressional elections in 1994, the Republicans began a concerted effort to eliminate the U.S. Department of Education, which had been established by President Carter. AERA joined forces with a coalition of education organizations to save the department. A comprehensive response was developed which included telemarketing strategies as well as more conventional advocacy tactics. Ultimately, the Republican leadership dropped its plan for a frontal assault on the agency.

Creation of the "National Board for Professional Teaching Standards" 1988-1990

Scope and Content note
In the early days of the National Board, AERA was called on for advice about the need for additional research to provide a foundation for the proposed activities, as well as for guidance and support with regard to securing federal funding for this purpose. AERA ultimately supported a sole-source contract and federal funding to the National Board for conducting necessary research and instrument development.

"Research Contributions to Educational Improvement" report 1983

Scope and Content note
In 1983 AERA submitted an "unsolicited grant application" to the Department of Education. The proposal called for bringing together researchers and practitioners to investigate the topic of research contributions to educational improvement.

Files contain individual chapters prepared by selected scholars, a final report to the Department, and a summary authored by George Kaplan (Items for an Agenda: Educational Research and the Reports on Excellence) based on the chapters.
