Acquisition Information
SAFR-01366
George Lamuth loaned San Francisco Maritime National Historical Park (SFMNHP) 26 slides for duplication in October of 1998 through Richard W. Rutter. The original slides were returned to Lamuth and the duplicates were accessioned into the collection April 30, 1999. The slides are a subset of slides used as part of a presentation on the EPPLETON HALL on October 24, 1998, and a detailed list of all of the slides used for this presentation was included in the accession.
Historical or Biographical Note
George Rudolph Lamuth sailed in the Merchant Marines, was a San Francisco fireman for 38 years, and was an avid maritime photographer.
George Rudolph Lamuth was born in the Potrero Hill neighborhood of San Francisco on September 19, 1918, to Mary (Babich) and George Lamuth. He had one sister, Helen. George married his wife, Ella Mae, around 1945 and they resided in the Potrero Hill neighborhood. Lamuth served in the Merchant Marines before and after World War II, and then he worked
The EPPLETON HALL is a steam sidewheeler with side-lever engines, and is the only remaining intact example of a Tyne paddle tug. The vessel was engaged on the Wear and Tyne rivers of northeast England from 1914-1967 and she is a direct descendent of the first craft to go into commercial service as harbor tugs. In 1946, she was purchased by France Fenwick, Wear and Tyne Ltd., which operated her in the Wear River until 1964 (she is being restored to this period today).

The EPPLETON HALL's steam engines are descended from a type first developed in England in 1828. The two large side lever engines, often referred to as grasshopper engines, operate the paddle wheels independently, making the tug especially maneuverable in tight spots. Another unusual feature of the EPPLETON HALL is its hand-forged boilers designed to use seawater. Every six weeks the accumulated salt had to be chipped out of the boilers and rinsed away. The advantage was that large freshwater tanks did not have to be carried aboard.

In 1952, the tug was slightly modified in order to obtain a Passenger Certificate, so that she could transport officials from newly-launched steamers. Her last commercial owner was the Seaham Harbour Dock Board, which operated her from 1964 to 1967. She was sold for scrap in 1967 to Clayton and Davie, Shipbreakers and, while sitting on a mud bank, fire (part of the scrapping process) destroyed her wooden afterdeck and interior.

In December of 1968, Scott Newhall discovered the EPPLETON HALL in Newcastle, England, after trying to acquire the last operating paddle tug RELIANT, which was slated to be dismantled and pieces put into an exhibit at the Greenwich Maritime Museum. Newhall wanted to purchase the RELIANT but was told it was already spoken for and he was shown the EPPLETON HALL as an alternative; however he still wanted the RELIANT. In early 1969, Newhall assembled a group of maritime enthusiasts in Newcastle for the negotiation of the purchase of the RELIANT and they arrived sometime near the beginning of May. Scott hoped to purchase the RELIANT from the Greenwich Maritime Museum, defray the cost of their investment in the RELIANT and have them use parts from the EPPLETON HALL for their exhibit instead. He wanted to do all this in order to prevent the sea worthy vessel RELIANT from being cut-up into parts and then take the RELIANT back to San Francisco.

In early May 1969, it was determined that they could not purchase the RELIANT and Newhall decided to purchase the EPPLETON HALL. Restoration efforts were turned to her and Bill Bartz remained in Newcastle to oversee the design and renovation of the vessel. She was taken to R.B. Harrison & Sons, Ltd. Shipyard. Bartz worked alongside shipyard employees to restore her and hired appropriate staff to make sure that she was logistically able to leave England for the United States. As she was no longer a vessel used for commercial means, she was registered as a yacht. This allowed her to take on a resident and he died there on June 13, 2006.

P99-015 (SAFR 23143)
These photographs document EPPLETON HALL arriving at San Francisco's Fisherman's Wharf on March 24, 1970. They include exterior views of the vessel underway and at dock, one view of Captain Scott Newhall on deck, as well as the crowd gathered to greet the vessel. It also documents EPPLETON HALL's consequent activity in San Francisco: at Pier 43 with aft mast removed; alongside BALCLUTHA at Hyde Street Pier; at Pier 43-1/2 and Pier 41 just out of the shipyard; underway; and several views at Hyde Street Pier. The collection includes views of the paddle tugs ROKER (built 1904) and RELIANT (built 1907).

The slides were used in a presentation about EPPLETON HALL at the San Francisco Maritime National Historical Park on October 24, 1998. The presentation was coordinated by Richard W. Rutter and photographs taken by H. Alan Sims, George Lamuth and John Kortum were used.

Collection Arrangement

The slides are arranged and numbered according to the original order of the slide presentation on October 24, 1998. The original presentation consisted of 80 slides, numbered in consecutive order of presentation. The 26 slides in this collection were used in the presentation, and they have been numbered using their original presentation number. The other 54 slides are not included in this collection.
