Scope and Content
2850 pp. in all, comprising the collected correspondence of Sir William Lee, fourth Baronet of Hartwell, Buckinghamshire,
(b. 1764 - d. 1801) and other members of his family.
This collection of correspondence documents the career of an English army officer during part of the Napoleonic Wars, near the close of the eighteenth century.
The first letters were dated in the early 1770's when William Lee was a student at Harrow. Most of these letters are from Lee's father, Sir William Lee, third Baronet.
The next large group of letters are from Lee's relatives, the Harcourts including Simon Harcourt, father of Lee's mother and the first Earl Harcourt. Simon's letters are all addressed to his son-in-law, William Lee, third Baronet. His letters contain intelligent comments -- with interesting details -- upon affairs of court and upon the political scene.
Lee entered the 16th Light Dragoons as a cornet and later obtained the rank of Lieutenant-colonel. A short time after, Lee went with the Dragoons to the Continent (1793) to assist in the English campaigns against the French. From this period are copies of his own letters, letters of his friends in the army and letters from his father and Lady Elizabeth Lee, his mother.
These letters offer an intimate picture of this unsuccessful phase of the English campaign against France.
Lee's own letters are important less for what they tell us about Lee himself than for what they say about English army life and about the politics of soldiership during this period when the reputation of George III's army was at a low ebb.
In addition to the letters, there are numerous official documents which further describe the activities of the 16th Light Dragoons in England, the Netherlands and France.
