Scope and Contents
The records of the California Rural Legal Assistance, Inc. (CRLA) contain administrative files, litigation files, and special program and subject files, dating from the founding of the organization in 1966 through circa 2000. Material in the collection documents CRLA's ongoing work to provide legal aid to farmworkers and the rural poor in California and highlights particular priority areas where advocacy efforts were focused, including employment, education, immigration, health and environmental safety. Also included in the collection are numerous files related to CRLA's development and survival as an organization. The history of its funding and re-funding by the Office of Economic Opportunity (OEO) and the Legal Services Corporation (LSC) is particularly well documented. The majority of material within the collection originated from CRLA's central administrative office in San Francisco, although some records from regional branch offices are present as well.

Arrangement and Description
The collection is organized into nine record groups:
Record Group 1. Board of Directors
Record Group 2. Directors
Record Group 3. Administrative and Financial Files
Record Group 4. Communication and Development Files
Record Group 5. Advocacy
Record Group 6. Program Files
Record Group 7. Audiovisual Material
Record Group 8. Government Relations
Record Group 9. Born-Digital Material
Materials within an individual record group, or within a series or subseries of an individual record group, have been arranged alphabetically by box title. Box titles and subtitles may include a general description (i.e. financial files), a format term (i.e. pleadings) a subject term (i.e. mechanization), or the name of a specific legal case or individual person. Legal cases are alphabetized by the name of the primary plaintiff or defendant. As a second level of arrangement, some boxes have been organized chronologically (i.e. meeting files and similar types of material have been arranged chronologically when possible and relevant).

The majority of the collection has been described at the box level. Descriptions are meant to give researchers an overall sense of what will be found in the entire box but are not exhaustive and do not list the contents of every folder.

Historical Note
Founded in 1966 through a grant from the Office of Economic Opportunity (OEO), California Rural Legal Assistance, Inc. (CRLA) was the first federally-funded rural legal services program as well as the first such statewide program. CRLA provides legal services to farmworkers, particularly migrant farmworkers, and the rural poor in California. James D. Lorenz Jr. was the founding director of CRLA and organizers César Chávez, Dolores Huerta and Larry Itliong were all members of its founding Board. There have now been five other directors: Cruz Reynoso, Martin R. Glick, Richard Baca, Alberto Saldamando, and the current director, José R. Padilla, whose tenure began in 1984.

As one of the original "War on Poverty" programs, CRLA was nationally renowned for pursuing high-impact class actions that benefitted millions of low-income people in California and nationally until the 1996 "Gingrich Congress" prohibited federally-funded legal services from participating in class-action litigation. Today, CRLA continues to assist individual clients and communities through alternative forms of litigation, remaining steadfastly committed to advocating for the rural poor as a class in order to address the root causes of poverty. To achieve this goal, CRLA has developed an effective organizational structure, with a central administrative office in San Francisco as well as numerous regional branch offices located near rural communities within California. Regional offices allow CRLA to make its services available to clients where they live, while the central office is able to direct priorities for the organization as a whole. CRLA has traditionally focused its advocacy efforts around a set of strategic priority areas, including employment, housing, education, immigration, civil rights, health, and environmental safety. The organization has achieved legal success in all these areas. For example, an early CRLA advocacy effort led by Ralph S. Abascal—who joined CRLA as a staff attorney in 1968 and later became CRLA General Counsel for over twenty years—resulted in the eventual banning of DDT and other pesticides in the early 1970s. Other examples of successful litigation include Carmona v. Division of Industrial Safety (1975), a case that CRLA argued in the California Supreme Court and that led to the banning of El Corito, the crippling short-handled hoe.

Other notable CRLA cases include Diana v. Board of Education (1970), in which CRLA challenged the practice of placing non-native English speakers into classes for the mentally disabled. CRLA was also instrumental in the passing of the Chacon-Moscone Bilingual-Bicultural Act of 1976, and enhanced the power of this Act in the case of Comite De Padres de Familia v. Riles (1985), which further defined the state’s responsibility for supervising bilingual education programs. CRLA also achieved a victory for undocumented immigrants by securing the addition of the Special Agricultural Worker provision to the Immigration Reform and Control Act (IRCA). The provision allowed a million undocumented workers to become legalized. CRLA went on to litigate two of three "late amnesty cases" filed in the federal courts in California against the Immigration and Naturalization Service (INS) for its misadministration of IRCA: Catholic Social Services (CCS) v. Meese (1986) and Zambrano v. INS (1988). During litigation that spanned over twenty years, the CCS case was argued at all levels of the federal courts including before the U.S. Supreme Court.

CRLA’s priorities are revisited at least once every five years in the form of Statewide Priorities Conferences, and are also addressed through the formation of specific task forces aimed at identifying, understanding, and raising awareness about issues affecting the organization’s rural clients. Additional changes CRLA has undergone include the establishment of a Migrant Unit, in order to more effectively address issues faced by migrant farmworkers. Over the years, CRLA has worked hard to remain independent and true to its original mission, which has included collaboration with other legal services groups, such as the Mexican American Legal Defense and Educational Fund (MALDEF), through activities such as co-counseling and the joint filing of amici briefs.

Despite being consistently praised by its clients and recognized by organizations such as the American Bar Association for providing high-quality legal services CRLA has been particularly subject to politically motivated efforts to defund the organization and has been forced to struggle for its survival. The 1970 veto by then Governor Ronald Reagan of CRLA’s federal, OEO funding is perhaps the most notable example of this type of attack.

CRLA’s relations with Reagan had been tense ever since CRLA litigation successfully blocked his attempts to cut California’s welfare programs in 1967. Following these defeats in court, Reagan appointed Lewis K. Uhler, a former member of the John Birch Society as director of the State’s OEO, an appointment that seemed clearly aimed at undermining CRLA. Uhler compiled and submitted to Reagan a report that listed 127 alleged incidents of CRLA misconduct, ranging from misuse of OEO funds to intentionally inciting prison riots. The report failed to acknowledge any of CRLA’s significant accomplishments. On December 26, 1970, Regan vetoed the OEO $1.8 million grant for CRLA’s 1971 refunding.

Although Reagan’s veto was no surprise, the outrageous and libelous allegations contained in the Uhler Report prompted CRLA and its supporters to launch an ambitious campaign to save the organization. CRLA demanded an investigation into the Uhler charges and submitted its own report that refuted each incident cited in the Report. The Nixon administration appointed a commission consisting of the Chief Justices of three state Supreme Courts (all of them Republicans) to investigate. This commission conducted hearings throughout California (in which Uhler himself refused to appear or participate) and ultimately concluded that all the charges against CRLA were false.

The Uhler Report controversy was not only a formative moment in CRLA’s history but by exposing the vulnerability of legal services to political attacks, led to the bi-partisan creation of the federal Legal Services Corporation (LSC) with the goal of reducing state and local interference under the OEO funding scheme. This controversy and its implications have been examined in numerous articles and studies, including the 1973 article published in The Hastings Law Journal by legal scholars Jerome B. Falk and Stuart R. Pollak, Political Interference with Publicly Funded Lawyers: The CRLA Controversy and The Future of Legal Services. The controversy is also treated in Michael Bennett and Cruz Reynoso’s 1972 article in the UCLA Chicano-Latino Law Review, California Rural Legal Assistance (CRLA): Survival of a Poverty Law Practice.

Reagan’s gubernatorial experience with CRLA led him throughout his subsequent Presidency to consistently seek the elimination of LSC and all federally-funded legal services. His efforts were continually blocked in Congress. Notwithstanding his inability to eliminate LSC, Reagan used his presidential power to appoint LSC members dedicated to eliminating the programs through politically-motivated investigations that interfered with program operations and often resulted in decreased funding. A continuing, decades-long series of audits, investigations and extraordinary conditions imposed on funding by LSC and/or its Office of Inspector General, have consumed thousands of hours of CRLA staff time and pro-bono efforts from supporting members of the Bar. In 1981, to help offset program cuts due to decreases in funding, CRLA and its supporters created the CRLA Foundation (CRLAF). The Foundation receives no federal funding, and is therefore able to undertake significant work that CRLA cannot because of federal restrictions on LSC-funded organizations.

Despite the many challenges CRLA has faced, the organization has shown a remarkable resilience throughout its nearly fifty years of operation. CRLA continues its unique mission, providing legal representation and other assistance to farmworkers and the rural poor in California, and has evolved into one of the most effective advocacy programs in the United States.

Biographical Sketch

Bill Hoerger was employed for 31 years by California Rural Legal Assistance, the nationally-renowned state-wide, non-profit legal services program. He retired in February, 2013. He continues to serve as Counsel to CRLA in a limited-time role.

Bill joined CRLA in 1982 as trial counsel for a then-nationally controversial lawsuit challenging the University of California’s use of federal monies to underwrite harvest-mechanization research that displaced small, family-operated farms and farm workers. He worked solely on this litigation for five years, initially through trial, resulting in a verdict against the University, and on appeal which culminated in the California Supreme Court’s refusal to review an intermediate appellate-court decision that reversed the trial court’s interpretation of federal law.

Bill continued as a Regional Counsel with CRLA overseeing litigation and other advocacy in various of the program’s statewide network of offices until 1996 when, under a management reorganization, he became one of CRLA’s original Directors of Litigation, Advocacy and Training, a position he retained until retirement. He became recognized as an expert in the legal doctrine of the employer-employee relationship. He was lead counsel for CRLA in two of the California Supreme Court’s most notable decisions in this field, Borello & Sons v. Department of Industrial Relations (1988) in which the Court appointed CRLA, although not counsel for a party, to participate as a “friend of the court”. He was lead counsel for the farmworker appellants in Martinez v. Combs (2010). In both cases, the Court significantly expanded the doctrine of the employment relationship, entitling low-wage workers to the protections such as minimum and overtime wages, workers’ compensation, and other worker protections that are available only to those considered to be employees. Both decisions greatly restricted the abilities of businesses to treat their workers as as “independent contractors” and have been widely followed in other state and federal courts.

In the early 1990s, Bill guided CRLA staff in developing a statewide model for effectively and rapidly enforcing occupational health and safety standards in agriculture through court-ordered injunctions against non-complying employers. Prior to CRLA implementation of this strategy, it was universally assumed that only the state agency, Cal-OSHA, could enforce these standards through a process so time-consuming that, particularly in agricultural employment, citations often were never issued because the seasonal work had terminated before investigations could be undertaken. CRLA’s private enforcement model was subsequently adopted by California labor unions.

From 2005 on, Bill worked closely with CRLA’s senior management in responding to federal investigations of the program repeatedly undertaken at the behest of California agricultural employers, upset about the program’s successes representing low-wage workers.

In 2012, the National Legal Aid & Defender Association awarded Bill the Reginald Heber Smith Award by for Outstanding Achievements in Providing Legal Services to the Poor. Before coming to CRLA, Bill worked 3 years for the State of California’s Agricultural Labor Relations Board, the last two as part of a special enforcement unit in the General Counsel’s office in Sacramento. Prior to working for the ALRB, he was a Deputy Public Defender in Monterey County.

Bill graduated from the University of Chicago Law School in 1970. He previously acquired a Master’s degree in agricultural economics and a Bachelor’s degree in Rural Sociology, both from The Ohio State University. He grew up on a small, family-operated dairy farm in northeastern Ohio.
