Any transmission or reproduction beyond that allowed by fair use requires permission from the owners of rights, heir(s) or assigns.

Scope and Contents
Spanning one hundred years, this artificial collection of portraits, snapshots, and group photographs features a calvacade of notable figures, including politicians, military leaders, heads of state, journalists, authors, poets, scientists (especially professors of physics, astronomy, and mathematics), explorers, pioneers, labor leaders, musicians, and artists. The identity of some subjects is not always confirmed. Some names do not appear on the print and were from an unknown external source. Others remain unidentified. The majority of photographs are signed (i.e. autographed) or inscribed (used to describe a note to someone in particular). Some have stamps and other notes contemporary to the print and later, including old SUL call numbers. These are not always noted or transcribed. The photographer or studio and its geographic location has been transcribed when known. Most prints are believed to be original, but there a few older copy prints. While most prints are typical early 20th century prints in various mounts, there are also many older cartes-de-visite and cabinet cards, and one Polaroid circa 1980-1983.
This collection was assembled over the life of Stanford Special Collections and includes multiple accessions and donors. Many of them (perhaps a third) came from the famous studio Harris & Ewing and are frequently inscribed to the firm’s Martha Ewing, implying that she may have donated them herself. Another significant source of photographs is Stanford faculty, including Frederick Edward Brasch, Melville Best Anderson, Edith R. Mirrielees, and Mary Sheldon Barnes. Some photographs were removed from their original archival papers. For example, mixed throughout the collection are several images from Columbia and the gold mining region of California’s Tuolumne County; these are likely separated from the Otheto Weston Gold Country Collection, ca. 1849-1944 (M0029): https://searchworks.stanford.edu/view/4082747. All of these sources are noted where indicated.
