Abstract: This collection is comprised of manuscripts, typescripts, recordings, photographs, and an extensive clippings file documenting the professional career of Jacques Derrida and providing comprehensive documentation of his activities as a student, teacher, scholar, and public figure. In addition, Derrida’s files on the 1988 controversy regarding Paul de Man’s World War II-era writings are also included. Best known for the development of “deconstruction,” Derrida was trained as a philosopher, but his work engages and transverses numerous other discourses such as literature, politics, law, religion, psychoanalysis, and ethnography. Ranging from his early work as a student to his recent seminars, the material in the archive spans from circa 1946 to 2000. The collection contains numerous pages of notes and written reports that reflect Derrida’s academic training under the tutelage of figures such as Louis Althusser and Michel Foucault. His commitment to teaching is documented by a full collection of teaching notes for the multitude of seminars that he has taught over the course of his career. The more public side of Derrida is also well represented by notes, working drafts, final drafts, and other materials related to his vast published output. With the exception of the photographs, the collection contains no material that might be described as “personal,” such as private correspondence. The vast majority of the materials are in French.

Biography
Jacques Derrida was born in El-Biar, Algeria on July 15, 1930. He spent his childhood attending primary schools in El-Biar and Algiers until the beginning of Pétainisation within the Algerian school system in 1940, at which point Derrida and other Jewish students began to experience forms of anti-Semitism in the classroom; by 1942 he was barred completely from attending class at the Lycée Ben Aknoun. Although the Germans never occupied Algeria, Derrida was not allowed to return to school until the spring of 1943. During the interim, he attended the Lycée Émile-Maupas, which was run by Jewish teachers expelled from the public school system, but Derrida frequently avoided the classroom.

Upon returning to the Lycée Ben Aknoun in 1943, Derrida completed his primary education and received his baccalauréat in 1948. Although he had already begun to consider a career as a teacher, Derrida had not yet resolved to pursue his studies in France until he heard a radio show dedicated to career orientation in which a professor of literature, who had Albert Camus as a student, explained that the wide array of subjects studied in the system of higher education allowed one to defer specialization. Until that moment, Derrida had never even heard of the Ecole normale supérieure, but he decided that his future awaited him there and immediately enrolled in hypokhâgne (the first year of a course of study designed to prepare students for one of the Grandes Ecoles) at the Lycée Bugeaud in Algiers.

A year later, Derrida left for France to attend the Lycée Louis-le-Grand. He spent a total of three years in khâgne (the latter years of the Grandes Ecoles preparatory course of study). During this period Derrida met many individuals who have played an important role in his life, including Pierre Bourdieu, Michel Deguy, Louis Marin, and his future wife, Marguerite Aucouturier. By the end of 1952 he had gained admittance to the Ecole normale supérieure. For the next four years, Derrida worked assiduously and acculturated himself to a career as an academic philosopher while studying under such major figures as Louis Althusser and Michel Foucault. He became interested in the work of the German phenomenologist Edmund Husserl and wrote “Le problème de la genèse dans la philosophie de Husserl” for his higher studies dissertation. He completed his studies in 1956 and passed the agrégation, thus becoming qualified to hold a position as a teacher in the higher education system.

Upon passing the agrégation, Derrida received an invitation to pursue further research on Husserl at Harvard University. While in the United States, he began to translate and to write an introduction for Husserl's Origin of Geometry. The following year, at the beginning of the Algerian War, Derrida became a teacher of French and English in a school for soldiers’ children. During this period, Derrida avoided any active duty and never wore a military uniform.

After spending two years teaching in Algeria, Derrida returned to France in 1959 and took his first teaching position in hypokhâgne at Lycée Le Mans. In the same year, he made his first public speaking appearance, delivering “‘Gènese et structure’ et la phénoménologie” at a conference at Cerisy. Between 1960 and 1964 Derrida taught “general philosophy and logic” at the Sorbonne, working as an assistant to Suzanne Bachelard, Georges Canguilhem, Paul Ricoeur, and Jean Wahl. His teaching during this period addressed a wide variety of philosophical problems and issues. In 1964 he declined a position at the Centre national de Recherches supérieures and began teaching at the Ecole normale supérieure at the invitation of Althusser and Jean Hyppolite.

From this point onward, Derrida rapidly became a major presence in the academic and intellectual world. In 1966 he made his first significant appearance in the United States at the Johns Hopkins University International Colloquium on Critical Languages and the Science of Man, a conference which marked America's growing interest in the work of French theorists and philosophers. It was a significant moment in American intellectual history insofar as the conference was intended to introduce structuralist thought to the United States. Derrida's paper, “Le structure, le signe et le jeu dans les discours des sciences humaines,” effectively dismantled structuralist thought at the very moment when it was being introduced to the American academy.

Throughout the remainder of the decade, he published widely and attracted increasing recognition. In addition to numerous substantial articles published in the journals Critique, Tel Quel, and Revue de métaphysique et de morale, he also published his first three books in 1967: La voix et le phénomène, L’écriture et la différence, and De la grammaïologie. Each of these books constitutes a significant contribution to philosophical thought, and by the end of the decade Derrida had already assured himself a prominent position in the history of Western philosophy.

The 1970s began with a series of publications in which Derrida addressed the thought of such philosophical luminaries as Plato, Aristotle, Kant, Hegel, Nietzsche, Husserl, Heidegger, and Austin. He also engaged more literary texts with his work on writers such as Mallarmé, Artaud, Bataille, Genet, and Ponge. These works, including Marges de la philosophie, La dissémination, Glas, and La vérité en peinture altered the study of literature, linguistics and philosophy in the Western tradition. In 1975 Derrida began teaching at Yale University. His work, along with that of his colleagues and friends Paul de Man and J. Hills Miller, rapidly became renowned throughout America under the banner of “deconstruction.” Subsequently both Derrida and his work received an increasingly enthusiastic reception in the United States, especially as the end of the decade and the early 1980s witnessed the rapid appearance of his works in English translation. Around the same time, he established the collection La philosophie en effet at Editions Galléée, a French publishing house which issues some of the most important works in contemporary philosophy, theory and psychoanalysis.

Throughout the 1970s Derrida also became increasingly active in social and political projects. Most importantly, he founded the Groupe de Recherche sur l'Enseignement philosophique (GREPH) in 1975. Intended to secure the place of philosophy in secondary and university education at a time when the government was attempting to reduce or eliminate philosophy altogether, GREPH articulated the persistent relevance of the study of philosophy for contemporary society and culture. In June of 1980 Derrida finally gave his official thesis defense at the Sorbonne. For numerous reasons related to the path that his work had taken up until that point, Derrida remained a maître-assistant, an academic rank far below his qualifications. In 1983, however, he was elected to the Ecole des hautes Etudes en Sciences sociales (EHESS). In the same year he helped found the Collège international de Philosophie for the French Ministère de la Recherche et de la Technologie.

Derrida continued his active intervention in various social and political spheres during this period. He participated in events organized against Apartheid and in support of Nelson Mandela. He also co-founded (with Jean-Pierre Vernant) the Jan Hus Association to assist dissident Czech intellectuals and conducted a clandestine seminar in Prague. During his visit to Prague in 1981, he was observed closely by the police and eventually arrested on a fabricated charge of "production and trafficking of drugs." He remained imprisoned for a few days until President François Mitterand intervened on his behalf and demanded his release.

During the mid-1980s Derrida became associated with the University of California, Irvine. Following the death of his friend Paul de Man, he gave a series of commemorative lectures entitled "Memoires for Paul de Man" as the 1984 Wellek Library Lectures. In 1986 he became a tenured professor at UCI, as did J. Hillis Miller. For the remainder of the decade, his academic and political activities, as well as his publishing, continued at a steady pace. In 1989 he and Jacques Bouveresse served as co-presidents of the Commission de réflexion pour l'épistémologie et la philosophie established by the French Ministère de l'Education nationale.

Throughout the 1990s and 2000s Jacques Derrida continued to publish and teach widely. As his fame and notoriety increased, the number of conferences and colloquia in which he participated multiplied. Furthermore, he held teaching appointments at numerous universities across the globe and received honorary doctorates from ten institutions throughout the United States and Europe. His publications appeared with great frequency and were translated into numerous languages. At the end of his life, Derrida lived in Ris Orangis, France (a suburb of Paris), and he continued to teach at EHESS and UCI. In 2003, he was diagnosed with pancreatic cancer, and died a year later on October 8, 2004 in a Paris hospital.

NOTE: Much of the biographical information used in the biography and the chronology was taken from the "Curriculum Vitae" found in Jacques Derrida, written by Geoffrey Bennington and Jacques Derrida (Chicago and London: University of Chicago Press, 1993).

Guide to the Jacques Derrida Papers MS.C.001b MS.C.001b
Student work Series 1 circa 1946-1960

Physical Description: 1 Linear Feet
Scope and Contents note
This series contains manuscript materials relating to Derrida's work as a student. The work covers a wide range of topics and extends from his early days in preparatory classes in Algeria up to his independent research on Husserl. While the series does not represent all of the work that Derrida produced while he was a student, it contains all that is known to be extant. None of the material has been published. The terms dissertation and exposé as used in this description denote student essays and reports. The series has been organized in four subseries.

Lycée, Hypokhâgne and Khâgne Subseries 1.1 1946-1952

Subseries Scope and Content Summary
This subseries consists of a variety of notes, dissertations, and exposés written while Derrida was still a student preparing for entrance into the university. Almost all of the material was written in conjunction with a particular course of study. Subject matter includes philosophy, literature, history, and English. The arrangement of the subseries is largely chronological, with materials organized by the educational institutions at which Derrida studied.

L'Ecole normale supérieure Subseries 1.2 1952-1956
Subseries Scope and Content Summary
This subseries represents Derrida's work while he was a student at the Ecole normale supérieure. The content of the materials reflects his training as a philosopher, but also includes studies in psychology and literature. The subseries includes papers written for professors Louis Althusser, Jacques Brunschvicg, and Maurice de Gandillac. Many of the materials include marginal comments by the professor for whom they were written.

Work on Husserl Subseries 1.3 1953-1957

Subseries Scope and Content Summary
This subseries contains all the notes and drafts pertaining to Derrida's intensive study of Husserl while he was a student. Much of the material is undated and probably was created during Derrida's periods of intensive research on Husserl at Louvain in 1953-1954 and at Harvard University in 1956-1957. The majority of the items are reading notes. While none of the material has been published, the work represents the background research to both Le problème de la genèse dans la philosophie de Husserl and the introduction to Derrida's French translation of Husserl's Origin of Geometry. Although some of this material chronologically overlaps with that in subseries 1.2, its original order has been maintained because it represents Derrida's own organization.

Teaching and seminars Series 2 1959-1995

Physical Description: 8.3 Linear Feet

Physical Description: no content

Series Scope and Content Summary

This series, representing materials related to Derrida’s work as a teacher, begins with his earliest teaching at Le Mans in 1959 and continues up to his most recent seminars in L’Ecole des hautes Etudes en Sciences sociales (EHESS) and the University of California, Irvine (UCI). The series documents almost every seminar that Derrida has ever taught. In the majority of cases, the seminar is fully written out (in either manuscript or typescript) and is supplemented with a variety of notes and photocopies. Throughout this description the term séance is used to denote individual course sessions of a seminar. This series is arranged chronologically, beginning with several short, undated seminars that are probably from Derrida’s first years of teaching. Folder dates indicate the year in which a seminar was given, but within the folder seminar material may precede or post-date the year of the seminar.

Original page groupings have been indicated in notes within some folders when that grouping wasn’t already apparent, and when Derrida made an effort to single out the pages as a group by, for example, clipping them together or wrapping a page around the group. Where there are clearly distinct versions of a seminar or when there are virtually identical copies of seminar materials, these materials have been so noted. Any seminar notes or accompanying texts typically are housed either in a folder preceding the rest of the seminar material, or with the first copy of the seminar. Where there are several copies of a seminar, the first copy is usually more marked and obviously used. For seminars given during more than one year, material is separated chronologically whenever possible; when that distinction could not be clearly made, all material is placed under one date with a note of reference at the other date. The locations where seminars were given are noted below when they are known for certain; more often, the schools at which Derrida taught during the seminar year are given. Typically, Derrida has taught at the Ecole normale supérieur (ENS) and at EHESS in winter, at Yale University and at Johns Hopkins University in the fall, and at the UCI in the spring.

A name and subject index is also available.

Audio and video recordings Series 4 1985-1999

Physical Description: 2.4 Linear Feet
Physical Description: no content
Series Scope and Content Summary
This series contains all the video and audio tapes in the collection. The majority of the tapes are of seminars, but some document conferences, discussions, films and television shows featuring Derrida, and unaired material cut from aired productions. The series has been divided into two subseries.

Access
Access to original audio and video cassettes is restricted; copies are made for researcher use.
Audio and video recordings Series 41985-1999
Audio recordings Subseries 4.1 1985-1998

Subseries Scope and Content Summary
This subseries contains approximately 230 audio cassettes of Derrida's seminars given in Paris at the Ecole des hautes Etudes et Sciences sociales. Both public seminars and the smaller seminaires restreintes (restricted seminars) for enrolled students are included in the tapes. No cassettes are available for the period from June 1989-November 1996. The majority of the cassettes were recorded by Makoto Asari and given by him to Derrida. Descriptions of seminars are transcribed from the labels of the original cassettes, and no further information is available regarding the titles or topical content of the recorded seminars; some seminar material in Series 2 may correspond to these audio cassette recordings. All audio cassette recordings are in French. The subseries is arranged chronologically.

Access
Use copies of each audio recording must be made prior to researcher use of the recordings. 48 hours advance notice is required in order to create use copies, which will then become a permanent part of the collection. Contact Special Collections and Archives for further information.

Series 41985-1999

Video recordings Subseries 4.2 ca. 1987-1999

Scope and Contents note
This subseries contains a variety of VHS video recordings. The large majority of the originals are in the European VHS format (PALS); researcher use copies have been made in the North American VHS format (NTSC). Events taped include seminars, conferences and discussions, films and television shows featuring Derrida, and unaired material cut from aired productions. Tapes are in English, French, Japanese, Russian, Greek, Hungarian and German, as well as combinations of these languages. Durations given for some tapes are taken from material accompanying those tapes and have not been confirmed. This subseries is arranged chronologically; several undated video cassettes are arranged first, alphabetically by title.

Access
Use copies of all video recordings are available for researcher use.

Photographs Series 5 circa 1970-2000
Physical Description: 0.3 Linear Feet
Physical Description: no content
Series Scope and Content Summary
The photographs series consists of approximately 60 color and black and white images of Derrida, both individual and group portraits. Many of the individual portraits are by professional photographers, and are stamped with the photographer’s name on the verso. The collection includes publicity photographs, produced by Derrida’s publisher, and also contains photographs which document Derrida’s participation at various conferences, most notably the 1997 Colloque de Cerisy, L’animal autobiographique. In these and other group photographs, Derrida is photographed with Gilles Deleuze and others at Cerisy in 1972, with Francis Ponge, Harold Bloom, Louis Althusser, Gayatri Chakravorty Spivak, Jorge Luis Borges, Hans Georg Gadamer, Philippe Lacoue-Labarthe, Pierre Bourdieu, J. Hillis Miller, Ornette Coleman, Nelson Mandela, Jean-Luc Nancy, and Hélène Cixous, among others. Most of the photographs date from the 1980s and 1990s. The collection includes both original prints and copy prints that were made by the library from originals that were returned at the request of the donor. This series is arranged chronologically.

Series Scope and Content Summary
This series consists of materials related to Paul de Man's writings from the early 1940s. In 1987, it became known that Paul de Man had written for Le Soir, a collaborationist newspaper, from December 1940 to November 1942. Ortwin de Graef found articles that de Man had written in 1942 for Het Vlaamsche Land in November 1986 and began finding articles by de Man in Le Soir a few months later. Jacques Derrida shared some of these articles in a colloquium at the University of Alabama in October 1987. In November, Werner Hamacher, Neil Hertz, and Thomas Keenan made plans to publish all of the wartime writing and sent out requests for critical responses, to be published without editorial intervention. They also made photocopies of de Man's writings available. Articles about de Man's wartime writings began appearing in newspapers and magazines at the beginning of December 1987. De Man's writings were published in 1988 as Wartime Journalism, 1939-1943, and the critical responses were published in 1989 as Responses: On Paul de Man's Wartime Journalism. The debate in newspapers and magazines continued into 1989.

The materials include drafts of texts written by de Man; photocopies of the texts published in Le Soir; drafts of Derrida's essay "Comme le bruit de la mer au fond d'un coquillage...La guerre de Paul de Man"; drafts of responses to de Man's wartime writings, many of which were published in Responses; correspondence, both public and private; research materials related to the period of Belgian occupation; and photocopies of newspaper, magazine, and journal articles that appeared in response to the writings. Several of the drafts of de Man's essays are annotated, as are some of the articles that respond to the wartime writings. The drafts of articles which respond to de Man's writings are often undated, but seem to be from a relatively restricted period of time, largely 1988-1989. In many cases, they are accompanied by letters. Correspondence includes letters sent to Derrida, as well as letter to the editor sent by others and letters sent to colleagues, such as Neil Hertz and Thomas Keenan. The group of materials which document occupied Belgium includes a text translated by de Man, Gerard Walschap's Cure d'aspirine (1943). Many of the clippings and other materials were shared with Derrida by Keenan.

This series is arranged topically in a series of categories: writings by de Man; writings by Derrida; writings by others on de Man; correspondence; historical accounts of occupied Belgium and contemporary texts; and clippings from newspapers and magazines.

              Physical Description: 8.3 Linear Feet
              Series Scope and Content Summary
              This series consists of clippings gathered by Argus de la Presse, a clipping service used by Derrida to monitor all information published about him in French and foreign press, and general collected clippings. This series has been arranged in two subseries. The Argus de la Press subseries is arranged chronologically, with undated clippings filed before the beginning of the chronological arrangement. Within each year, clippings that contained no indication of date beyond the year are filed before the beginning of the month-by-month arrangement for that year. The general clippings subseries is arranged by subject. Other finding aids available
              A spreadsheet containing item-level description of the clippings in Series 7 is also available. Download the Excel spreadsheet or the PDF
