Biography

Charles R. Nixon was born in Rochester, New York, the son of a Presbyterian minister. Nixon pursued his Ph.D. in political theory and philosophy at Cornell University under the direction of Professors George Sabine/Philosophy and Robert Cushman/Political Science. Nixon began his teaching career in Political Science at Smith College in Northampton, Massachusetts from 1944-1947. He later joined the faculty of the Political Science Department at the University of California, Los Angeles in 1947. Nixon's intellectual interests evolved throughout his professional tenure at UCLA. From 1947 to 1953 Nixon directed his teaching and research to topics of political theory and the American political process. The articles Nixon wrote during this period and political campaigns in which he participated reflect these dual, yet overlapping interests. As an Associate Professor in 1954, Nixon received a one-year appointment at the University of Natal in Durban, Union of South Africa. Financed by a grant from the Carnegie Corporation, Professor Nixon assisted in the formation of a program in advanced training in social science research. Nixon's desire to teach and live in South Africa was spurred by a belief that experiencing a non-Western culture was necessary to sharpen his "fundamental knowledge of the underlying premises and thought patterns of Western society." Nixon's immersion in the tumultuous racial politics of apartheid South Africa became the topic of his seminal publication "The Conflict of Nationalisms in South Africa," and marked the beginning of his lifetime interest in African politics. Upon returning home from South Africa, Nixon redirected the nature of his previously philosophical research toward a more empirical approach (1955-1959). Drawing upon his previous experience as a campaign worker, Nixon joined Professor Dwayne Marvick in a study of the political behavior of active campaign workers in Los Angeles. This study of political behavior examined the personal background, social context, and motivational actors related to active participation in political campaigns. Nixon also infused empirical methods into his teaching during this period by incorporating survey research methods into the class "Public Opinion and Propaganda" and addressing the relationship between empirical and theoretical concepts in his course "Nature of Political Inquiry." From 1959 to 1969, Nixon conducted several field research trips to Nigeria, Rhodesia, and Nyasaland. For two years, 1959-1961, he was member of an M.I.T sponsored research team examining the relationship between economic development and political change. Nixon explored this research question by investigating political value trends among Nigerian government expenditures. Nixon gathered copious quantitative data on his project; returning to Nigeria on three occasions 1963, 1966, & 1969 to further update his data on government expenditures. In 1962, Nixon served as Visiting Lecturer at the University of Rhodesia, Salisbury, organizing their curriculum in political philosophy. In 1972, Nixon was appointed Chair of the UCLA Political Science Department. While Chair of the Department Nixon was responsible for recruiting several notable faculty members in addition to improving departmental policies and resources. He resigned his chairmanship in 1976 in order to pursue his research project on "Power and Responsibility." This project explored philosophic controversies about human responsibility, human action, and causality. Prof. Nixon believed these concepts were critical to "our understanding of some broader problems of political and social theory." He continued to work on this project after his retirement in 1995.

Nigeria, Rhodesia, and Nyasaland research. 1950-1970

Arrangement

The first three sub-series of this series consist of communications, field, and background research Nixon conducted while abroad in Nigeria, Rhodesia, and Nyasaland. The remaining sub-series, drafts and data, were produced by Nixon upon returning from his field research. In each of these series and subseries, Rhodesia materials consistently proceed Nigeria materials due to the relatively limited amount of information Nixon collected on Rhodesia compared to Nigeria.

---

Communications 1959-1965

Arrangement

This subseries is arranged chronologically, in the order of the years Nixon traveled to Africa.

Scope and Content Note

This subseries contains professional communications with MIT and personal correspondence before and during Nixon's trips to Nigeria, Rhodesia, and Nyasaland in 1959, 1962, 1966, & 1969.

Nigeria & London Travel Correspondence 1969*Field & Interview Notes 1959-1961*Arrangement

This sub-series is arranged in the methodological process by which Nixon's conducted his research. The first part of the sub-series contains spiral notebooks used by Nixon to take notes in the field. Next in the sub-series are Nixon's transcribed interview notes and field notes, separated by his Nigeria and Rhodesia trips. The interview notes and field notes are grouped separately, but chronologically ordered.

Scope and Content Note

This sub-series contains Nixon's spiral field notebooks and transcribed interview and field notes during his Nigeria and Rhodesia research trip from 1959-1961. Nixon interviewed numerous government officials, including the former Northern Rhodesian (now Zambia) President, Kenneth Kaunda. Nixon primarily inquired into both the political and economic situation of the countries which he visited.

Arrangement

These publications are separated by the country of origin, Rhodesia and Nigeria, and then arranged alphabetically by the topic of the publications.

Scope and Content Note

This sub-series consists of a variety of publications including newspapers, newsletters, magazines, articles, reports, and professional photographs collected by Nixon from the early 1950s to the late 1960s. Distinct from the policy positions detailed in government publications, these materials cover a variety of topics including election results, political party propaganda, opinion pieces, and scholarly articles. Nixon collected these publications to further his understanding of Nigerian and Rhodesian economic, political, and social issues. Although this sub-series consists primarily of publications, several folders also contain Nixon's notes and drafts.

Nigeria & West Africa Data 1950-1965

Arrangement

This data series first contains 11 boxes of data compiled by Nixon for his Nigerian Expenditure Project. These boxes are arranged according to the order by which they were processed: data cards, output tapes, and then computer printouts. The final two boxes contain data for the West Africa Comparative Analysis Project

Scope and Content Note

The Nigerian Expenditure Data consists of IBM data processing cards, IBM output tapes, and computer printouts detailing the results of the data processing. Nixon also compiled an extensive bibliography of Nigeria newspapers and book sources, which he recorded according to subject on index cards. Nixon also collaborated in the "West Africa Comparative Analysis Project", from which he compiled four boxes of data (in the form of index cards) on African elites and leaders.

South Africa Research 1949-1967

Scope and Content Note

As an Associate Professor in 1954, Nixon received a one-year appointment at the University of Natal in Durban, Union of South Africa. This series contains Nixon's drafts and notes about various South African political topics written during and after his appointment. Nixon also collected a variety of Apartheid publications which are also included in this series.

Arrangement

This series is arranged by two sub-series: "Drafts & Notes" followed by "Publications." Both sub-series are arranged alphabetically based on the content of the folders.

Drafts & Notes 1955-1967*Scope and Content Note

This sub-series contains drafts and notes written by Nixon during and after his trip to South Africa in 1964. Nixon wrote notes and articles on South African political topics, which includes but is not limited to: Nationalism, Non-European Franchise, and Education Policy. This sub-series also contains Nixon's recommendations regarding U.S. Policy toward Southern Rhodesia. The success of the Rhodesian independence movement against British colonialism in November, 1965 spurred an international response due to the questioned "legality" of Rhodesian independence and the impact of this event on politics in South Africa. The State Department solicited Nixon to develop policy statements in response to this abrupt change in regime.

American Politics/Political Behavior Research 1956-1974*Scope and Content Note

This series contains original research conducted by Nixon regarding topics of American politics and political behavior. Nixon worked on three projects in this particular sub-field of study: "Active Campaign Workers" project; California Council on Criminal Justice police study, and "Mobilization of Political Demands" study.

Arrangement

This series is divided into three sub-series, which are arranged alphabetically, according to the title of the project.

---

Active Campaign Workers project 1956-1960*Arrangement

This sub-series is arranged alphabetically by the title of the folder's contents.

Scope and Content Note

Drawing upon his previous experience as a campaign worker, Nixon joined Professor Dwayne Marvick in a study of the political behavior of active campaign workers in Los Angeles. This study of political behavior examined the personal background, social context, and motivational actors related to active participation in political campaigns.

This sub-series contains Nixon's notes, research, grant proposals, and drafts of his work on this project.

Political Theory

Scope and Content Note

In addition to his Comparative and American political interests, Prof. Nixon was an avid Political Theory scholar and teacher. Nixon began his political theory scholarship in graduate school under Dr. George Sabine, which culminated in his dissertation "Free-Speech for Anti-Democratic Groups?" Throughout his career, Nixon incorporated political theory into his research inquiries. The philosophies of Max Weber and Karl Marx were among Nixon's foremost theoretical interests. Prof. Nixon began his "Power and Responsibility" project later in his career and continued this research after retirement.
