Biographical/Historical note
Carole Pateman was born in Sussex, England on December 11, 1940. From a working-class family, Pateman benefited from British social reforms of the 1940s which allowed her to attend Oxford University through merit-based examinations, where she earned her BA, MA, and PhD. Pateman was appointed to the Department of Political Science at UCLA in 1990 and taught there until becoming a professor emeritus. Pateman was the first woman President of the International Political Science Association (1991-1994) and President of American Political Science Association (2009-2011). She was awarded honorary doctorates from the Australian National University, the National University of Ireland, and Helsinki University. Her accomplishments include: Fellow of the Australian Academy of Social Sciences (1980), the American Academy for Arts and Sciences (1996), and the British Academy (2007). Pateman is known for her books Participation and Democratic Theory (1970), The Problem of Political Obligation (1985), The Sexual Contract (1988), and The Disorder of Women: Democracy, Feminism and Political Theory (1989).
