Historical Note
Graduate education at UCLA was formally approved by the University of California's Board of Regents on August 8, 1933 in San Francisco, California. Initially, authorization was only for graduate studies leading to a Master's of Arts, with enrollment limited to 125 students. In the first year, however, 170 students registered for graduate work. The Master's of Arts degree was offered in 16 departments, and 42 master's degrees were awarded during the 1933-1934 academic year. By May 22, 1936, the regents authorized work leading to a Ph.D. degree in four departments: English, History, Mathematics, and Political Science.
These formative years of graduate education at UCLA were characterized by a preoccupation with administrative matters, the formulation of standards for admissions and instruction, the development of courses and graduate degree programs, research facilities, and the need for expansion. During this time, the administration of graduate education on the Los Angeles campus was established in a pattern which remained virtually unchanged until 1961. A Graduate Council for the Academic Senate, Southern Section, was established in 1934, headed by the newly appointed Dean of Graduate Studies, Dr. Vern O. Knudsen, Associate Professor of Physics. In 1938, the Regents established the Graduate Division, Southern Section, which, under the direction of Dean Knudsen, was responsible for the administration of advanced degree programs of the Los Angeles, Riverside, and La Jolla campuses. Knudsen resigned his position in 1958 to become Chancellor of UCLA, and was succeeded by Dr. Gustave Arlt, Professor of Germanic Languages and the first Associate Dean of the Graduate Division, appointed in 1950. When Arlt retired in 1962, Dean Horace W. Magoun, Professor of Anatomy, was appointed in his place.
The period from 1958 to 1963 witnessed significant growth in enrollments and in the number of degree programs offered by the Southern region. In 1961, the Regents voted for the abolishment of the regional Graduate Divisions and Graduate Councils, permitting each campus to establish its own Graduate Division and Council, headed by its own appointed Dean. Thus decentralized, the Graduate Division, Southern Section, was replaced on campus by the Graduate Division, Los Angeles, headed by Dean Arlt until the succession of Dean Magoun in 1962. Several additional Associate Deanships were also established during this period, to better meet the Graduate Division's three primary areas of responsibility: admissions, student and academic affairs, and research and fellowships.
Today, the Graduate Division is responsible for the overall quality and progress of graduate education at UCLA. Primarily, it serves as the campus-wide advocate for the advancement of graduate education, facilitating communication between schools, departments, and administrative offices to ensure the implementation of policies set by the Academic Senate and Graduate Council; it protects and promotes the welfare of students and postdoctoral scholars; it monitors graduate degree progress and advocates for the fair and equitable treatment, advising, and mentoring of students; it works to fulfill the University's diversity mission by enhancing the representation and educational experience of underrepresented students; in coordination with the Academic Senate and Graduate Council, it recommends and implements policies for graduate education, and evaluates new and continuing academic programs; it increases funds available for graduate student support, and provides fund management to optimize the availability of merit-based support for student recruitment and retention; it conducts and reports on the results of institutional research, facilitating program review, enrollment planning, and strategic planning; it enhances public recognition of the value and excellence of graduate education at UCLA.

A faculty Dean heads the Graduate Division, and currently also serves as Vice Chancellor of Academic Affairs. Three Associate Deans assist the Dean in fulfilling the mission and functions of the Graduate Division. The Division is currently organized by the following offices: Office of the Vice Chancellor and Deans; Graduate Admissions / Student and Academic Affairs; Graduate Outreach, Diversity, and Fellowships; Graduate Student Support; Information Technology; Institutional Research and Information Services; and Postdoctoral Services.

AC 6/19/07: The Institute of American Cultures (IAC) was created in 1969 as an umbrella organization to support ethnic studies on campus and to build connections among the four ethnic studies research centers – American Indian Studies Center, Asian American Studies Center, Bunche Center for African American Studies, and Chicano Studies Research Center. The IAC was established to strengthen and coordinate interdisciplinary research and instruction in ethnic studies and fulfills its purpose by making funds available for research and fellowships. Funding is primarily available in the form of predoctoral and postdoctoral fellowships and research grants. The IAC originally reported to Al Barber, the Vice Chancellor of Research Programs, then was transferred to the Graduate Division. Past chairs of the IAC include Norris Hundley (Professor in History Department) and Shirley Hune (Professor in Urban Planning and later Associate Dean of the Graduate Division). The Council on Diversity (COD) was established by Chancellor Young in 1988 to ensure the achievement of full diversity at UCLA, in all its aspects, including undergraduate and graduate student recruitment and retention, staff and faculty recruitment, retention, and promotion, curriculum, and a hospitable campus environment. The COD launched the Diversity Lecture Series in 1994. Shirley Hune was also the Chair of the Council on Diversity.
