Historical Note

The Mexican Revolution, which took place from 1910-1920, was a national upheaval of power often considered one of the most important events in Mexican history.

Revolution broke out first in 1910, after President Porfirio Díaz was unable to solve the issue of presidential succession. This led to armed conflict, which spread from wealthy landowners to the middle class and organized labor, turning into a national revolution. While Díaz was ousted from power in 1911, the conflicts continued throughout the decade as revolutionary forces split into factions and struggled for power.

This struggle for reform eventually led to the creation of the Mexican Constitution of 1917, which established Mexico as a Constitutional Republic and was the first document of its kind to include social rights.

Collection Scope and Contents

The collection contains over 300 black and white photographs related to the Mexican Revolution, including photos of Mexican and American soldiers, military leaders, various battles, and photographs of the devastation caused by the revolution. Photographs also include portraits of important revolutionary figures including Álvaro Obregón, Francisco Madero, Pancho Villa and Pasucal Orozco.
