Biographical Note
François Guizot was born on October 4, 1787, and was a French historian and statesman. Guizot was a dominant figure in French politics prior to the French Revolution of 1848, serving in a number of government roles from 1814 to 1848. These included positions as the Minister of Public Instruction, Minister of the Interior, Minister of Foreign Affairs, and finally as the Prime Minister of France from 1847-1848. Guizot was known for expanding public education, as well as his leadership of the Doctrinaires, a group of French politicians who supported a constitutional monarchy.

Guizot resigned as prime minister in 1848 after his ban of political gatherings caused rioting in Paris, and King Louis Phillipe abdicated soon after leading to the establishment of the French Second Republic. Guizot first fled to England, but returned to France a year later and spent his time writing history volumes and other works until his death in 1874.

Collection Scope and Contents
The collection consists mainly of personal and professional letters written by François Guizot, a French historian and politician. Correspondence in the collection includes letters written by Guizot as part of his many political positions, including as the Minister of the Interior, Minister of Public Instruction, and Minister of Foreign Affairs, and cover mostly routine administrative subjects. The collection also contains some personal letters written by Guizot, most notably including some of his views on the French political scene in 1822, as well as letters regarding his literary career in the 1850s and 1860s. Most of the letters in the collection have an accompanying typed English translation.

The collection also includes an engraved portrait of Guizot painted by Paul Delaroche and engraved by Sidney L. Smith, as well as five handwritten essays by an unknown author on philosophy and various aspects of French history.

Collection Arrangement
The collection is arranged topically, and chronologically within folders.
