Introduction
This is a separate catalog to the productions and scripts found in the Asian American Theater Company Archives (CEMA 9) in the California Ethnic and Multicultural Archives. As an annotated list of productions and scripts, the catalog provides information about Asian American Theater Company (AATC) productions. These productions span the period from its founding in the early 1970s to the early 1990s. For each production there is a brief synopsis of the play or performance. based on AATC's production files. There also is available a folder-level Guide to the Asian American Theater Company Archives in the Special Collections Department.

Productions are listed in alphabetical order. The producers listed are mostly affiliated with AATC and do not solely own the rights to the production. AATC serves as the "Producer" for the production(s) unless otherwise indicated in the "Notes" field. Script files contain scripts that may not have been produced by AATC. The "Notes" field contains information based on the AATC archives through each production's program(s), publicity, critiques, announcements, etc. When applicable, the numbers listed in each column correspond with each other for that production. The symbol "" means that the "Year Written" is the date on the copy of the script, and "©" is the copyright year of the script by the playwright(s).

The contents of this listing are identified as Series 1 in the Guide to the Asian American Theater Company Archives. The Guide is available in print form and is on the World Wide Web (www.library.ucsb.edu/speccoll/cema).

Notes:
Preview: September 16, 1989-September 19, 1989; Premiere: September 20, 1989. All I Asking for Is My Body was adapted from Milton Murayama's critically acclaimed novel of the same title which was published in 1975 and reprinted by the University of Hawaii Press in 1988.
Synopsis:
All I Asking for Is My Body is a dramatic family tale. The Oyama family has been plagued with bad luck for several generations and now the two Oyama brothers, Tosh and Kiyo, face a life of "indentured servitude" as laborers on the nearly feudal style plantations where sugarcane and the owners are king. Faced with an enormous family debt, the two boys turn to boxing as a way to combat their own frustrations and possibly fight their way to independence. The tension builds with the mounting pressures on Tosh, the "number one son," to abide with traditional concepts of filial piety. This pressure spills over onto the younger brother Kiyo who is also grappling with his emerging manhood as well as a neighbor's daughter. The attack on Pearl Harbor further complicates the lives of this strong-willed family, but it may also offer some a chance to escape. (From AATC press release)

Synopsis:
An American Story is a powerful drama about unfulfilled hopes and dreams as seen through the lives of a group of habitués in a rundown San Diego bar. It deals with the seamier segments of society--those who have somehow wandered off the accepted path of the American dream. The Filipino immigrant experience and its heavy religious overtones are used to tell the story, but the conflicts are common to all people. Spanning two days--Christmas eve and day--An American Story encapsulates the intense human drama and turmoil that unfold as the characters wrestle with their unmet dreams. They are forced to confront their own disillusionments by the protagonist’s struggle to be freed from her tortured life and to realize her own quest for self-respect and happiness. It is one of the few available plays with a Filipino American theme and offers a realistic and sometimes painful look at the kinds of conflicts which many immigrants face in this society. But despite the somewhat downbeat nature of the story, the play does, in a sense, celebrate the resilience of the human spirit and its ability to withstand fate’s unkind blows. Synopsis:
Anatomy of a Springroll was created as a metaphor for a personal journey, a rediscovery of cultural identity through an oral tradition. According to Kwan, one of the writers, "for traditional people, food is not a thing but a way. In its preparation is the essence of a language and a connection to a culture. Food is a necessity and much, much more. It is a celebration of the spirit, a means by which one can taste and consume the moment and be connected to an ongoing tradition. Anatomy of a Springroll was created as a bridge for understanding between people that transcends their differences through the universal and common ground of food. It is easy to forget your own culture while living in that of another." Using large, colorful puppets, elaborately masked and costumed performers and cinematic and photographic elements, Anatomy of a Springroll, conveys a sense of the history and traditions of Vietnam from its ancient past to the present. (Hokubei Mainichi, May 16, 1992)

And All Through the House n.d. December 4, 1985-December 22, 1985

Synopsis:
And All Through the House is a fantasy-comedy considered the "Asian Christmas Carol." It is a Christmas play about Peter and Bunny, a quintessential yuppie couple trying to recapture the magic of Christmas with the help of three irascible and adorable Christmas Spirits who invade their home on Christmas eve. In the play, Peter is an Asian Scrooge who, because of pressures at work is incapable of enjoying Christmas, while Bunny is a tranquilized, Stepford Wife. The result is, like in Dickens' "A Christmas Carol," Peter is visited by ghosts or, in this case, an old friend from the past who tries to help him get into the holiday spirit. Synopsis:
The Case of the Missing Messiah is a Christmas story that "happened" in the 1930s as opposed to a stereotypical 33 A.D. It is about an insurance company which has refused to pay up on a life insurance policy on Jesus Christ's life because no one can find his body. A controversial prophet has been crucified by the Roman Empire for fighting the system, but his body is missing from the tomb. Mary Magdalene claims that she is the sole beneficiary of Jesus' life insurance policy. She hires Arnie Hecht, a Mike Hammer/Sam Spade private eye, to find the body. His job is to find Jesus and free the Christians from the slammer--or else there won't be any Christmas shopping for anyone. (By Don Lau, J.D., Asian Week, December 15, 1989)

Synopsis:
Coda/Points of Departure are two one-act plays dealing with gay themes. Coda is about a Japanese American gay man and his Filipino American woman friend who are lead by their sexual attraction to a very ordinary white stud to betray the deeper values they hold and which are necessary for their self-respect. As the situation tenses, they turn their anger onto each other, and then bleakly realize that the stud's sole attraction is white. The viewers are left pondering the effect of social and political power on their own sexual lives. Points of Departure portrays a gay situation between an American publisher and Filipino poet, and is concerned with the generation of Filipinos raised under MacArthur and steeped in the second-hand fantasy American culture taught them in school in imbruing their political and social institutions. It is about an artist who is trying to survive in a society that is not really interested in the arts. (From AATC press release)

The Dance and the Railroad was first produced by the Henry Street Settlement's New Federal Theatre, produced by Woodie King, Jr. and Steve Tennen. 1) This is the fifth production of The Dance and the Railroad which won a 1982 Drama Desk Nomination and was named one of the best ten plays of 1981 by both the New York Times and the New York Daily News. This is also the first production of the two character play not to feature Tsi Ma and Obie-award winning actor Jone Lone in roles named after the two actors; 2) The Dance and the Railroad was a co-production of Asian American Theater Company and Rainbow Theater presented by Asian American Theater Company's Community Stage Program.
Synopsis:
The Dance and the Railroad combines in its title the antithetical elements of the lives of two Chinese working men in 1867 America. The Railroad? Long days of heavy labor, in an isolated country, and far from a normal society of homes and families. The Dance? The classical movement of Chinese opera, by which to preserve self-discipline, a sense of value, and a connection with old, rich tradition. (By Margo Skinner, Asian Week, February 10, 1984)

Synopsis:
The Dream of Kitamura is a dream play in both content and form. Its story centers around an old man's recurring nightmare, and the elements of its style--the eerie music, the liquid movement, the non-linear narrative, the ambiguity of images that seem apt but defy interpretation--all evoke the mood of a vivid dream. The play unfolds in a series of dream scenes, flashbacks, silent images, dances, and narrative interludes. (By John W. White, Honolulu Star Bulletin, May 23, 1987)

Notes:
Synopsis:
Eye of the Coconut cleverly tells of how a Filipino father’s understanding and patience are sorely tested by his three high-spirited Americanized daughters. His best laid plans for their futures and his peace of mind are overturned as his eldest daughter, Suzie, trades in his choice of suitors for an “outsider”; the middle daughter’s search for identity takes her in the wrong direction; and the youngest, most impressionable daughter answers the calling of a hapless, young street minister to evangelize in Dallas. Eye of the Coconut is every father’s dilemma of loving those most dear and then learning to let go. (From AATC press release)

Synopsis:
Family Devotions centers around a wealthy, devoutly Christian Chinese American family, dominated by two Bible-thumping zealous aunts. Into their Bel Air estate pops their brother from the old country, one Da-Gou, who, when questioned last on the matter 38 years ago, said he was an atheist. They think he has come to escape his Chinese Communist "torturers," or at least to convert to Christianity. In reality, Da-Gou (a medical student at Columbia University decades before, who speaks English) has come on a mission. There is a guilty secret in the family's past which has led to agitated spirits seeking surcease. Perhaps he can find the ghosts a peaceful home with his Southern California relatives before he returns to China. His kin are successful, but they don't appear to be all that happy. Indeed, they constantly bicker, and find themselves victims of their own wealth. The only hopeful signs in this eight-member extended family are the two grandchildren; Jenny, 17, a plain-speaking, would-be dancer, and Chester, in his early 20s, a violinist on his way to join the Boston symphony. This family is rich, in money, love, God-in all their beliefs. Despite the power of money, the power of religion, and the power of politics, it shows how the traditional and contemporary family structure can be affected. Notes:
Preview: March 11, 1993-March 13, 1993, March 15, 1993; Premiere: March 16, 1993. This production of Fish Head Soup was extended until April 25, 1993. Fish Head Soup was developed at Sundance Institute, Mark Taper Forum, Bay Areas Playwright's Festival, and Berkeley Repertory Theater. It had its world premiere at the Berkeley Repertory Theater, directed by Oskar Eustis.
Synopsis:
Fish Head Soup is a wild ride into the heart of Japanese America. Fantasy, reality and memories are mingled to a stirring effect. With parallels to "Death Of A Salesman, " Fish Head Soup presents a family in the throes of tumult; a father who confuses past and present, a prodigal son who seems to do no wrong and his neglected brother, who labors to please. This drama has much to do with the great American tragedy, but its central theme is the Japanese American experience. The characters struggle with racism and their own internalized racism, yet this play, like Arthur Miller's classic is about pursuing the American dream. (By Erika Milvy, The Oakland Tribune, March 18, 1993)
Synopsis:

_F.O.B._, which stands for "Fresh off the Boat," takes place in Torrance, California, where Grace, an immigrant teenager, meets Steve, _F.O.B._, in her father's Chinese restaurant. Grace's cousin, Dale, also Asian, wanders in and joins the two for dinner. As the play progresses we witness tension between acculturated Asian Americans and "green" _F.O.B.s_ who are just learning to adapt to the newness and disappointments of "the pot of gold, " America. The central drama takes place between Grace, Steve, and Dale, with interrupting speeches and scenes from the past introducing other aspects of Asian myth and history. Synopsis:
Foxtrot on Jizo's Skin: Four Butoh Exercises is a celebration of the perennial departure of the last of the romantics among us all--a tragi comedy working at the level of ritual and myth to rediscover the power of verbal games and the poetic imagination in the art of resurrection. "If Death were like an absolute forgetting, forgetting that one was ever born; that one has ever lived at all; that one was happy once; that one pricked one's fingers by accident and bled a little and got a rush and went screaming for more,... then to remember/be remembered would be to conquer this black reaper and live on forever. Helen and Dad are foxtrotting and somersaulting--on memory's landscape, mapping with a steadfast passion, the eternal drama of Eros and Dust in four flashbacks against one common foe: Erosive Time." Synopsis:
The title, The Holiday Show, was selected purposely to emphasize the Asian American experience of the holiday season. Mainstream audiences are unaware that there is quite a large difference between the eurocentric and the Asiocentric perception of these holidays. The Holiday Show was designed specifically to explore these differences. In The Holiday Show, a Japanese and a Chinese family live next door to each other. Both are young families with father, mother, college freshman kid, and an eight to ten year old kid. The family who have all been born in the United States have always been friendly but have also always been plagued with hereditary differences that they were not necessarily aware of. The families join in celebrating and preparing for the arrival of Santa Claus. As the festivities proceed, the two college-aged kids begin to fall in love. The culmination of this festive day should be the arrival of the carolers. However, just before they arrive, an argument breaks out and all the old prejudices flare up hurting everyone's feelings. The lovers fall apart and the first act ends with a discordant "Silver Bells." Act II opens with the beginnings of healing started by one of the mothers (or eventually both) and the two younger kids. The Langston Hughes short story "One Christmas Night" is told in an illustration of how Christmas love is something that must be created universally for all people if it is to be anything less than hollow. The young kids make attempts to reunite the two lovers and the two fathers. The willful pride of the adversaries persists, however, and the kids can only muster a grudging truce. Thus, the families save face when they meet the carolers. (From AATC press release)

This production of Honey Bucket was co-produced by Asian American Theater Company and Swords to Plowshares-Veterans Fair.
Synopsis:
Honey Bucket is a horror story centered around Andy Bonifacio. The horror is present in his memories and nightmares of his tour of duty in Vietnam. Memories and ghosts of his dead comrades haunt him off and on at first—eventually they are all around him constantly, taking over his decisions, advising him what to say. Bonifacio's conflict comes about in the deterioration of his relationship with the people around him because of these horrors. The rapidly crumbling relationships show effectively the tenuous grip Bonifacio has on "the real world" that leads him to his mental breakdown. The torture that Bonifacio portrays comes from having to justify his six years in the Marines and one year tour in Vietnam to himself and the society he has come home to. All the while, in the back of his head, there is the doubt that that period in his life was a waste and his beliefs were wrong. (By Ed Diokno, Philippine News, October 16-22, 1976)

Synopsis:
How To Get a Head in Show Biz tells the hilarious tale of two San Francisco street performers who, during a juggling act, accidentally chop off the head of an audience volunteer. Miraculously, the head and body both survive, and what ensues is a frantic struggle to reunite the severed cranium with the angry body. This would be an easy task, except the jugglers are wanted by the authorities for decapitation, and the head and body don't necessarily want to be reunited. (Hokubei Mainichi, November 15, 1991)

i.e. Deutschland IV was first performed in 1987. A later revision with additional music by Timothy White was presented at The Lab in May 1988. The Third revision in 1990 was directed by Mary Forcade. This present version, originally commissioned by the Goethe Institute of San Francisco, was presented by The New Arts Connection and at Sonoma State University. This production of i.e. Deutschland IV was presented by Asian American Theater Company's Exponential Art Program.
Synopsis:
i.e. Deutschland IV does not attempt to give any answers to questions of the collective past. Rather, it is a confessional meditation on the emotional and spiritual landscape of Germany, in the course of which the character shifts from an anguished denial of her motherland to a final acceptance of her heritage. This is an intense hour-long journey of the soul, speaking on an emotional and visceral level as well as that of ideas. (From AATC press release)

Synopsis:
I'm Not Perfect is an emotional travelogue that explores relationships between a mother and her son, a man and his girlfriend and the apparent dichotomy between a performer's persona and the man inside. It centers on growing up in a Jewish neighborhood in Boston. This story is colored with memories of family, food addiction, psychotherapy, the Ed Sullivan Show and the contrast between his family and those portrayed in the image perfect world of television. I'm Not Perfect revolves around three generations of family, changing neighborhoods, and sitting around the kitchen table with relatives who are "bigger than life."

Synopsis:
Jelly Belly is a comedy about a fat Sansei man, not an autobiography. It is an expression, rather than a statement about growing up fat. Audiences will see two fat people, a formerly fat person, a person who has never been fat, and finally, a girl who's not even aware that "fat" can be an all-consuming obsession in people's lives. The audience will also see a tiny slice of life- a minuscule portion taken from a seventy pound overweight named Myron Hotei. Myron is a person who is struggling to accept his physical condition. Other people's opinions shape his self image; he's tolerant of "put-downs" and eventually is convinced that he deserves the belittling he receives. His struggle for a positive image is continually breached by people's attitudes and their ammunition: "fatty", "fatso", "beached whale", "hippo", "blimp", "piglet", "porky", "waddles", "lard gut", "thunder thighs", "jelly belly" and a long string of others. Familiar? This is what poor Myron has to deal with, or for that matter, anyone overweight. He has a condition of ridicule, prejudice, discrimination and abuse. Notes:
Synopsis:
The Last Spirit Boxer: The Life and Times of a Chinese Laundry Man is a one man play about the story of Hung Ock Lee, the Last Boxer, weaving the experiences of several men into one. Born in China during the Qing Dynasty (1644-1911), his father’s murder by foreigners in the German-held Shan Tung province led the ten-year-old Hung Ock Lee to join the Boxer Rebellion of 1900. In 1911, at the age of 20, Hung immigrates to America as a “paper son,” referring to those men who came to America with falsified identities. He spends the rest of his life working in the restaurants and laundries of the United States; a country that forbade Chinese (between 1882 and 1943) from becoming citizens, buying property, bringing their families to America, or marrying Whites. Synopsis:
Lo Foo and the Missing Ming Artifact is part who-done-it, part comedy and part psychological study. It is about an elderly detective's efforts to find not only “the missing Ming Artifact” but what proves to be his own true identity. The villain is Lo Foo, the detective's alter ego, a manufactured entity, complete with linen suit (“a symbol of purity and the Chinese laundry”), Panama hat, Confucius quotes a la Charlie Chin, likewise boasting Number 1 and Number 2 sons, just like in the movies. Making a Name for Ourselves was extended between July 9, 1993-August 2, 1993 and was a co-production of Asian American Theater Company and The Actors Anonymous. It emerged as an acting collective formed in 1991 from the cast of Wind & Water's "What Now?" for the purpose of writing, directing, and performing its own material.

Synopsis:
Making a Name for Ourselves demands a close and unflinching look at Asian American stereotyped images and how they affect (or destroy) identity. It takes a radically different stylistic approach by lampooning elements of American society through a series of short comic sketches with serious undertones. Skits include "The Mr. Asian American Pageant" (where contestants are judged on their ability to best represent misconceptions about being an Asian American male, the "Bad Musicals" series ("Laundry on the Roof"), and other short dramatic sketches and commercials bring home central issues about American life. Synopsis:
Manila Murders concerns the homecoming of a young Filipino law student, Thomas DeGuzman, to his family's estate somewhere outside of Manila. Thomas is the son of the late General Carlos De Guzman, a fictitious official in the Marcos regime. Thomas returns home to collect his inheritance to find his family in turmoil...his mother, sister, and brother have been allegedly threatened by political terrorists. Within the framework of the major theme are several subplots; the presence of Thomas' white wife from the United States, Thomas' uncle Pepe (a Manila police inspector) investigating the acts of terrorism, and the petty jealousies between the members of the De Guzman family. - Synopsis:
The Mission begins against the backdrop of the early California Missions and the alleged ill-treatment of the Costanoan Indians by Padre Junipero Serra. Through a unique "Indian-rap-peyote dream sequence, the characters time-travel to the home of three Latino comics living in the present day Mission District of San Francisco. Struggling to live and 'eke out' an existence as working actor-comedians, the three audition for a nationally televised show commemorating the beatification of Serra. Though the TV program is 'headlined' by Julio Iglesias, the trio is eliminated for not being "Hispanic" enough. Outraged and in desperation, they kidnap the international singing star, demanding in return, a slot on the TV show. What follows is a series of misadventures, hilariously funny, slapstick, serious, and tragic. (From AATC press release)

Synopsis:
New World is a multi-media piece that includes music, dance, and visual performance in its tale of a Vietnamese refugee trying to make a life for himself in San Francisco's Chinatown. It is the real drama of Dang Mui, balancing old world values with strange, new world realities. It is a compelling tale of bigotry and prejudice, Chinese versus Vietnamese, and the American dream of 'strength from diversity' within the microcosm of San Francisco's Asian American community.

Synopsis:
Paper Angels documents the story of Chinese immigrants who landed on Angel Island. Between 1910 and 1940, some 175,000 Chinese immigrants arrived at Angel Island thinking that they had reached the Gam Saan, the golden mountain of their dreams. What they discovered there was a Kafkaesque bureaucratic nightmare of imprisonment and humiliation. For months, sometimes years, they were detained in overcrowded, unsanitary barracks patrolled by armed guards-segregated, arbitrarily interrogated and repeatedly searched until officials ruled on their eligibility. Their stories are documented in Genny Lim's Paper Angels. (By Christine Koyama, New York Times, June 16, 1985)

Synopsis:
Sad Clown is a show for children and those young at heart. It is the story of a clown that cannot smile, and this clown's journey to happiness. Numerous mask characters meet the clown on his path, each in his or her way, trying to get the clown to smile. The show is humorous, magical, and touching without words, but is not representative of Western mime traditions. Presented with masks and puppets, Sad Clown is also influenced in style by Asian and Latin American mask and performance techniques. (From AATC press release)

Synopsis:
Secrets of the Samurai Centerfielder is a comic medley of monologue, slides, music, and dance-movement. Performance artist Dan Kwong explores his Asian American heritage and his struggle to fashion an identity in the midst of three cultures--Chinese, Japanese, and American. The overriding theme is racial oppression: what it means, how it has been practiced, and how victims respond. While Kwong's natural samurai baseball player provides an apt metaphor for the cultural challenges that exist for Asian Americans, his various slideshows are the most effective segments--one chronicling the struggles of Kwong's Japanese immigrant grandfather, another flashing racist quotes to the theme song of "The Donna Reed Show." Synopsis:
A Song for a Nisei Fisherman unfolds in five scenes, all having to do with the rituals of fishing: catching, cleaning, cooking, eating and again catching. After a plaintive introductory ballad, the play proper begins, with an old man, Itsu Matsumoto, talking to the audience quietly about the Zen of fishing, the little but important things one must do to be successful at this exercise in patience. As Itsu finishes, he flits back in memory, and we see the origins of his restrained exterior: his hard-working but emotionally cold farmer-father, whose violent interior came out during the too-numerous occasions when he got drunk on sake; Itsu's struggle to get into medical school and his indifference to widespread racism in pre-war America; his fights with his gambler/petty thief brother; Itsu, now a doctor, finally getting up the courage to propose to Michiko; the internment of the entire Matsumoto family in a World War II "relocation" camp; Itsu's anti-Japanese racism, when he discovers that his eldest son is dating a Chinese American woman, and his calling his younger son a "bum" and disgrace to the family because he wants to drop out of law school to become a writer. Toward the end of the play, we also learn that Michiko, his wife of 28 years, who died of a brain tumor, several times considered leaving the emotionally removed ego-obsessed Itsu, but stuck with him partially because separating would have shamed her parents. Now we begin to understand why Itsu is a fisherman. He's not only throwing a line into a shady stream—the still waters, and the rituals associated with fishing, are where this lonely isolated man feels most at peace, where he's most himself, where he can hook into his past and where he can begin to consider his future demise. Synopsis:
These two one-act plays contain an unexpected mix of folk tale with delicately shaded characterization. In The Sound of a Voice, a 17th century warrior visits a lonely country woman who coaxes him to stay so long he loses the will to leave. Is she a witch, as rumor has it, or are her powers based on an engulfing love? In The House of Sleeping Beauties, an old man visits a brothel to shut it down, but remains because it fulfills his need to relinquish memory and vanquish old age. In the course of his visit, the man develops a shirting relationship with the proprietress, whose motives are as opaque as the house's procedures.

The original production of State without Grace was produced by the Pan Asian Repertory Theater in New York.

Synopsis:
State without Grace is a woman's play taking place in 1978 in the Philippines. In a suburb of the capital, Quezon City, Celia returns to her homeland after 10 years of living in America. Four of those most recent years she was married to a Caucasian man named Mark. Celia's homecoming is marked by trouble at her Lola's (grandmother's) home. Her aunt Rosa and uncle Leon have had to move their three girls, Elise, Laura, and Nene, into Lola's home because Leon is unemployed. Just as Celia is headstrong and independent so, she discovers, is her cousin, Elise. In fact, Elise is going through what she went through at a younger age. Elise is causing a family scandal because her fiancé is a non-Christian, Ifugao researcher. The fact that he is a pagan, with primitive roots in the mountain people of the Philippines, roots he plans to go back to, is unacceptable to Lola. Celia is used as an unwilling emissary to bring Elise back. We soon learn that Celia's marriage was not the ideal she reported. That very traumatic event brought her back to the islands. At one point, she adds her voice to Lola's in trying to bring Elise back so her young cousin will not make the same mistakes she has made. Lola, in an effort to end the dispute, gives Elise an ultimatum: She can stay with her pagan lover but her whole side of the family, mother, father, and sisters will be thrown out of her house. Elise makes the difficult choice of leaving her fiancé and returning to Lola's home but in doing so breaks her relationship with Celia. Celia, realizing she too, must make her own decision, returns to America. (From AATC press release)

Canyon Sam's Taxi Karma and The Dissident were developed with Nina Wise. Taxi Karma was created in the Fall of 1990 directed by David Ford and was performed three times at the Marsh Theatre in San Francisco as part of their Monday Night Marsh Series in January 1991. The Dissident was created in the Spring of 1991 in collaboration with award-winning performer/director Nina Wise and performed in May 1991 at the New College of California.

Synopsis:
Taxi Karma and The Dissident is a monologue in two parts. The two pieces chronicle performance artist Canyon Sam's time and experiences in China and Tibet, where she explored her spirituality and her ethnic roots. Sam's point of view as a go-between of our several cultures is invaluable. Taxi Karma is a view of Dharamsala (a town in northern India which is the exiled capital of Tibet) as seen by Sam, a passenger in a taxi. From the cab, she comments on "Tibetans, Indians, Westerners, monks, beggars, spiritual seekers, tourists--a cacophony of humanity." As the Tibetans are guests of India, there is an inevitable clash among the Buddhists, Westerners, Hindi, and Tibetan cultures, all of which play out before the eyes of the taxi-riding tourist. Sam's genius as a writer/performer is not only that she dissolves the social boundaries of our two cultures, holding them up to us side by side as the constructs that they are. Her genius lies in her ability to inspire through storytelling. The Dissident is the story of a Tibetan nun who was a freedom fighter for Tibet, "She's typical. She's a monastic, she's young and determined. Her story really tells the story of freedom fighters in Tibet." (By Kate Bornstein, Arts and Entertainment, Bay Area Reporter, January 23, 1992)

Premiere: March 15, 1985. Tea was performed at East West Players in Los Angeles in June 1985 as a play-in-progress.
Synopsis:
As the daughter of a Japanese warbride, Velina Hasu Houston knew that the stereotypes about Asian warbrides which existed did not represent the experiences of her mother or other Asian warbrides. "There were a lot of stereotypes about warbrides, not only by people in Japan, but also by Americans and the Asian American community," noted Houston. "The stereotypes offended me because they had nothing to do with my mother's experiences and the experiences of other Japanese warbrides," she declared. Houston's anger at the stereotypes inspired her to write about the warbride experience. Tea is the third play in Houston's warbride trilogy; the first play being Asa Ga Kimashita (Morning Has Broken) and the second play, American Dreams. Tea, set in Fort Riley, Kansas is the story of five Japanese warbrides, each married to an American soldier of a different race. The play chronicles the experiences and feelings of the five women as they try to assimilate into the small Kansas community. (From AATC press release)

Synopsis:
Thirst is a play about strangers in a foreign land. This play is centered around the three daughters of a Japanese warbride, as they gather for a reunion at the family's central California farm after the death of their mother. Two of the daughters, Marina and Calista, were fathered by a Japanese American. The father of the eldest daughter, Plinka, was a white American soldier during the occupation. Plinka is referred to as a "half-breed" and a "woman/child" by her sisters and neighbors, and she is as different as her mother apparently was: ethereal, poetic, prone to dreaming—and to getting those around her to think and dream as well, activities they don't appreciate. Marina ran off to New York to find herself—or perhaps avoid herself—through high living and sexual flings. Calista, seeking simplicity in her life, has married a local Japanese American farmer, Jimmy, and is about to bear their child. Even after 16 years in this country, they still wonder about their place in it, especially in a white-dominated farming community where their heritage underlines their role as outsiders. Plinka is considering returning to Japan. (By Bernard Weiner, San Francisco Chronicle, January 22, 1986)

Tiny Dimes uses the corporate boardroom table as its centerpiece. Like some Luis Bunuel nightmare, a business meeting that can never get started yet can never end turns into a dream loop of paranoia, pointless displays of power and insipid self-help affirmations for five white collar workers. The playwright tunes in to the compartmentalization of American life. Work is walled off from home life, sex from love, food from real sustenance or pleasure, language from meaning. Synopsis:
Thinking of traveling to Japan? Think you're going to meet a nice, quiet, subservient woman? Amy Hill, the writer/performer wants you to think again. Tokyo Bound is a one woman show that explores the experience of traveling and meeting the women of Japan. Hill conveys the different quirky personalities of eight Japanese women through a series of side splitting portrayals. Synopsis:
Tsunami, the Next Wave in Asian American Performance Art is a six week series dedicated to presenting startling and original writers/performers who are making new waves in the Asian American performance community. Symposium in Manila is a two-part piece dealing with the insincerity behind the current vogue for multiculturalism, and alternative modes of protest for the disenfranchised. First Generation Stigmas contains text, music, puppetry, and video. It concerns growing up in America as the first-born son of immigrant parents. The Fat Lady Sings explores the devastating effects of eating disorders. Layers is a 60-minute installation piece that combines sculptural elements, movement, and narrative theater playing with possibilities inherent in paper, sound, on-stage sculpture and costumes. In Taxi Karma, the home of the Dalai Lama is vividly evoked in a madcap taxi ride through town. The ride introduces us to Tibetan aristocrats, Hindi movie stars, child beggars and Buddhist monks. In The Dissident, while searching for ancestral wisdom in China, Sam is drawn to the Himalayan plateaus where she meets a Buddhist nun with haunting accounts of post Tiananmen Tibet. Sex, Love, and Marriage uses humorous monologues and songs in a search through the mysteries of great sex, true love and a happy marriage. Lastly, Tales of the Fractured Tao reports on the condition of the family in Asian American life using autobiographical source material. The "Tale" utilizes slides, a silhouette screen and recorded voices and music. (From AATC press release)

Synopsis:
12-1-A is named after the barracks unit number at the Poston, Arizona concentration camp where the play takes place. This a charming and emotionally satisfying comedy-drama which clearly captures the essence of daily camp life for Japanese Americans during World War II. The play is issue-oriented, bringing out the different attitudes Japanese Americans had towards the war, the camps, and their mixed national loyalties. However, the strong political statement is about the senselessness and injustice of America's concentration camps. It is a truly moving, subtle, human story of displaced persons trying to cope with surviving in a hostile, lonely, spirit-breaking environment. The Tanaka family, headed by the widow Tanaka, is the focus. Koko, the teenage daughter, is an all American bobby-soxer who learns to love. Mitch is her older brother, the head of the fatherless family, who takes a harvesting job outside the camp and encounters racial hostility and disillusionment. While at the camps, the Tanakas make friends with an assortment of characters: Yo, a tough-talking, cynical young woman who is alone in the camps; Harry, a kind retarded man who falls in love with Koko; Mrs. Ichio, an embittered woman with a dying husband whose alliances are with Japan; and Ken, Mrs. Ichio's son, a camp administration worker who is suspected of being a collaborator. Notes:
Uncle Tadao had its world premiere production at East West Players in Los Angeles.
Synopsis:
Uncle Tadao set in 1984 Toronto, focuses on the Uchidas, a seemingly well-adjusted Canadian family of Japanese ancestry whose members think of themselves as Canadians first and Japanese second. But the Uchida family still bears the scars from December 7, 1941, when the loyalty of Japanese living in Canada and the United States came into question and a flood of paranoia was unleashed. The internment that followed resulted in the arbitrary loss of life, property, careers and self-esteem. It also left deep psychological wounds, which, for the Uchidas, are reopened in this play, allowing all the accumulated hurt, confusion, repressed anger and guilt to flow out. The catharsis brings a father to the brink of madness and suicide and nearly destroys his entire family. George Uchida is propelled into thinking about the past by his socially conscious daughter and becomes haunted by the specter of his dead brother, Uncle Tadao. Years of guilt come to the surface as George relives his brother’s resistance to the internment order, capture, detention in a special camp for political dissidents and, eventually, ritualistic suicide. Synopsis:
Death: the unknown, is something I suppose we romanticize about, we dread, we scorn, embrace, and respect. It's "there," and we live with it. Ironic though it may be, funerals are in fact not for the dead, but for the living! It seems to men, they are merely catalysts for pent up emotions, we the participants look within ourselves. Voices in the Shadows is such a story. It is about a man and his family following the death of his daughter. Tragedy prompts the characters to re-examine themselves and their relationships with one another. It is a story about an embittered man and his world with which he has sadly lost control. Synopsis:
Webster Street Blues is a warm, funny, nostalgic look at the lives of four young Japanese adults growing up in Japantown. The looming issues of the Vietnam War, Redevelopment, interracial relationships, finding a date and bowling, complicate the lives of the four characters. Chuck faces the draft lottery and is in love with Gayle. Gayle is in love with the anti-war movement. Sheri is in love with an alcoholic and Dean is in love with himself. These four characters inhabit Webster Street Blues, a comedy about relationships, love and angst set in San Francisco's Japantown in the summer of 1972. (From AATC press release)

Synopsis:

What Now? is a play about contemporary college life which has progressive themes dealing with family ties, political awareness and activism, religion, and interracial relationships. What Now? is especially significant because it focuses on the relatively untouched experiences of contemporary Asian Americans. Plays that students can identify with are even more scarce. (From AATC press release)

Synopsis:
Set in 1957, Whiskey Chicken revolves around a Chinese American family in San Francisco's Chinatown. Kwong, a 27-year-old waiter, wants to move out of the city so he can start a restaurant in the East Bay. His wife, Mei Ling, wants to move to the suburbs, the world of "Leave it to Beaver." Kwong's mother, Lai Ching, wants to return to China to see her family. Everyone wants to get out of Chinatown-except Chung, the crusty and proud patriarch who rules the roost and the family's weekly mahjongg game, and he holds the key to everyone's fate. Chung, who has opinions about everything, tells his wife that "the two worst things that ever happened to China were Mao Tse-tung and her mother." (From AATC press release)

Synopsis:
Performer/writer Fred Adler whose movement and spectacle-oriented work explores the physicality of communication in this quickly changing, complexly layered, and imagistic culture. In Wring of Life, these themes are expanded through taking a broad look at the search for the meaningful existence in the (post) modern world, primarily through the paradigms of work, place of residence, and love. The first act follows the madcap mishaps of a lost soul in search of employment, lampooning the absurdities of the job market and exposing the cutthroat social Darwinism of the modern world. The second act focuses on similar comic themes as they apply to the often frustrating and frantic search for housing, using acrobatic physical gesture and contortionism to poke fun at the on-the-edge way we live today. 1) Preview: August 29, 1990-September 4, 1990. Yankee Dawg You Die was extended until 11, April 1990; 2) Yankee Dawg You Die began its East Coast Tour and was also a co-production of Asian American Theater Company and New World Theater.
Synopsis:
Yankee Dawg You Die is a timely, humorous and poignant look at the barriers facing Asian American actors today. Vincent Chang and Bradley Yamashita are far apart in age and outlook, but they share the same problem-trying to get legitimate roles in Hollywood. Both actors have been limited in the roles they are offered, being given mostly small roles and walk-on parts. Vincent, the veteran actor, "will never turn down a role," and tries to bring dignity to each part. Bradley, the socially conscious up-start, challenges him. It is not enough to play small, demeaning roles, he states, because people will believe what they see. (From AATC press release)

The Year of the Dragon was a co-production of the Ethnic Cultural Center Theater of the University of Washington and the Asian Exclusion Act (formerly T.E.A.). The Year of the Dragon was originally produced by the American Place Theater in New York in 1974 directed by Russell Treyz.

Synopsis:
The Year of the Dragon is a moving and prodigiously complex play about Chinese American identity crisis and contemporary family life in San Francisco's Chinatown. The comic melodrama focuses on the various members of the middle-class Eng family, independent business people who run tours through Chinatown. Among the parents, children, and in-laws are a variety of conflicting impulses, some from the old world, some from the new. The characters try to assess where they stand in relation to the confines of their own family and ethnic group and to the broader spectrum of American society. 1) N/A; 2) Yellow Fever premiered in New York, presented and produced by the Pan Asian Repertory Theatre, the only Asian American professional theater on the East Coast; 3) N/A.
Synopsis:
Yellow Fever is a mystery-comedy concerning hard-nosed Japanese American private detective Sam Shikaze and his investigation of the mysterious disappearance of the Cherry Blossom Beauty Queen. Working with and sometimes against Shikaze are police Captain Kenji Kadota, an old rival from the police academy, and reporter Nancy Wing. Unlike Shikaze, hardworking and honest Kadota works within the rules of the system and from this stems much conflict. Reporter Nancy Wing is sexy, young, and ambitious. Together the three solve the mystery. (From AATC press release)

Yellow Is My Favorite Color was extended to September 3, 1978.
Synopsis:
Yellow Is My Favorite Color is the personal odyssey of Henry Kawamizu from early childhood during World War II through mid-life in the 1980s. It is the rollicking adventure of a young Japanese American conditioned to hate being a “Jap”, growing up in his own fantasy world of white women, acting super-stardom, and sexual superiority—all of which are unattainable because Henry is your basic myopic nerd, a Yellow child-man Woody Allen. Synopsis:
Evil villains, Zen samurais and deadly assassins appear in the adventure comedy Zatoichi Superstar! It is the story of a young man's search for meaning and enlightenment as he is caught in a cross cultural collision of real and symbolic characters. What choices will Ichi make as he encounters the Zen Master, a benevolent yet vulgar teacher of life; Yuki, a naive searcher for the meaning of life, and Boss Gonzo, a voluptuous evil kingpin.
