Acquisition Information

Biography
Raymond F. Gale was a professor of humanistic psychology at Ball State University from 1962 until his retirement in 1983. Prior to his faculty appointment he had served as director of counseling at the same institution's Burris Laboratory, following several years of work as a teacher and school counselor in Illinois public schools. Gale's research and writing focused on the common strivings of people across cultural divisions.

Scope and Content of Collection
The Raymond F. Gale Papers represent Gale's thirty years of teaching, research, and writing during his tenure at Ball State University. Included are notes and typescripts for his 1969 book Developmental Behavior: A Humanistic Approach as well as two later books; typescripts of several lectures, book proposals and articles; and the slides, script, and recording for a slide show entitled "The Common Strivings of People."
