Biography

Carl Ransom Rogers (1902-1987) was a psychologist and psychotherapist who initiated what Abraham Maslow later called the "third force" of psychology, following the behaviorism of Pavlov (and later B. F. Skinner) and Freudian psychoanalysis. This "third force" of humanistic psychology has been so closely identified with Rogers that it is often called Rogerian, a term its namesake objected to. His innovation was to treat clients as if they were essentially healthy, and he felt that growth would occur when a non-judgmental, non-directive (later, "client-centered") therapist created a warm, accepting environment to nurture the client and allow self-knowledge and self-acceptance to occur. Rogers is considered by many to be the most influential psychologist after Freud.

Rogers was born in Chicago, Illinois, and grew up in Oak Park and on a farm in the city's outskirts. His early life was a blend of staunch Christianity, a heavy emphasis on education, and a scientifically-oriented interest in farming. In college at the University of Wisconsin at Madison, he changed his major from agriculture to history with an intent to enter the ministry after an influential trip to China with the World Student Christian Federation, a trip which, ironically, also led Rogers to question mainstream Christianity. After graduation, he married Helen Elliott, following an engagement of nearly two years. The two moved to New York, where Rogers enrolled in the liberal, intellectually-focused Union Theological Seminary. After being introduced to work in clinical psychology here, however, he changed his career path once again and entered Columbia University's Teachers College.

While completing his Ph.D. at Columbia and for several years thereafter, Rogers worked at the Rochester Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children (RSPCC) as a child psychologist. It was during this time that he wrote his first monograph, The Clinical Treatment of the Problem Child, a work that brought him enough notice to be offered a full professorship at Ohio State University. While at Ohio, Rogers published Counseling and Psychotherapy, the book that summarized his own clinical experience while providing the foundation for nondirective therapy, and established the first supervised counseling practicum within an academic psychology department. In addition, it was during this time that he became the first therapist to record sessions with clients and offer them for study. All of this early work led to an offer by the University of Chicago for Rogers to establish a counseling center there.

Rogers spent twelve years at the University of Chicago, during which he developed the counseling center, served as president of the American Psychologists Association, and published Client-Centered Therapy, wherein he solidified his particular approach to therapy while shifting farther away from the traditional patient-therapist dichotomy. In Rogers's approach, the therapist frees the client from whatever impediments are keeping him or her from normal psychological growth, rather than curing the client of a previously-diagnosed neurosis or psychosis.

From 1957 to 1963, Rogers held a joint appointment as professor in both psychology and psychiatry at the University of Wisconsin, with an initial idea to integrate research and training within psychology, psychiatry, and social work. He later referred to this period as "the most painful and anguished episode in my whole professional life." Rogers found the effort frustrating, and ultimately resigned from the psychology department. This period did, however, see the publication of On Becoming a Person, Rogers's popular breakthrough. But after seven years in Wisconsin, Rogers had grown disillusioned with university life, and at sixty-two he and Helen moved to Southern California to join staff of the Western Behavioral Studies Institute in La Jolla, which had been founded by Richard Farson, a former student of Rogers's at Wisconsin. The WBSI was a loosely-structured research and training organization under which staff members formed their own programs and generated their own revenues. In its success, however, the looseness eventually became formalized and rigid, a direction with which Rogers felt uncomfortable.

In 1968, along with several colleagues and literally overnight, Rogers left WBSI to form the Center for the Studies of the Person along the original lines of WBSI, but with a commitment to maintaining the democracy and informality that they felt had been lost. Indeed, the CSP was dubbed a "nonorganization," run by a "non-director." Under the umbrella of the CSP, Rogers worked with "encounter groups" of individuals as well as larger organizations such as companies and schools. He published Carl Rogers on Encounter Groups in 1970, and Carl Rogers on Personal Power in 1977. Rogers spent the last several years of his life traveling extensively to promote his Person-Centered Approach in workshops as far-reaching as "The Central America Challenge," an international meeting of sixty-five leaders from seventeen countries.

Rogers died on Wednesday, February 4, 1987, of cardiac arrest following hospitalization for a broken hip, after having been a widower for nearly eight years.

Scope and Content

The Carl R. Rogers Collection contains select papers of Carl R. Rogers; records from his association with the Center for the Studies of the Person, a group he co-founded; and reprint articles from the Carl Rogers Memorial Library. There is an extensive audio collection of Rogers's and other CSP members' lectures and seminars; this series is currently undergoing preservation and reformatting work in order to be made more accessible. The bulk of the collection is from the years

1955-1989. Although written materials by Rogers form only a small part of the Rogers Collection, they are significant in the insight about Rogers's early thoughts that they allow. The Library of Congress, in Washington, DC, holds 59.2 linear feet of Rogers's personal and professional papers.

The collection has been arranged and described at the folder level. Folder dates within the container list were based on examination of the materials. Other folder-level information was taken from the original folder title, or, in the case of information enclosed in square brackets, supplied by the processor based on information found within the folder.

Related Collections

The Carl R. Rogers Collection forms part of The Humanistic Psychology Archives at the University of California, Santa Barbara.

Removed or Separated Material

The Library of Congress holds additional papers of Carl R. Rogers.

China Trip

Physical Description: 1 folder, 1 diary, 1 photo album

Scope and Content Note

In 1921, at the age of nineteen, Rogers was chosen by the World Student Christian Federation (WSCF) as one of ten youth delegates representing the US at the WSCF conference in Peking, China the following April. The conference lasted only one week, but the trip, for which Rogers missed half of his junior year in college, lasted from February to August, and included official WSCF and unofficial visits to Japan, Korea and the Philippines. Although he remained Christian, Rogers considered this trip as essentially a religious conversion, due to an exposure to new philosophies, a first-hand view of the downtrodden, and peak experiences in nature, particularly a climb up Mt. Fujiyama.

This series includes an extensive typewritten diary, an album of photographs, and supplementary correspondence.

Biographical

Physical Description: 1 photo album, 1 cassette tape, 1 box ephemera, 15 folders

Scope and Content Note

This series contains material about Rogers or material that shows something of his personality. Elements include audiovisual materials in the form of family portraits; photographs; one film reel (family, late '20s); one home movie; four cassettes of family members at a conference; one videotape (3/4"?) of family at a conference. Also: genealogical data, personal items, passports for CRR as well as Helen Rogers. Press clippings. Eulogies and obituaries. Pocket calendars from 1980-1986.

Awards and Honors

Physical Description: 12 folders

Scope and Content Note

Rogers received many honors during his career; this series represents those honors. Included are certificates of recognition, awards, honorary degrees, and accompanying photographs.

Diaries

Physical Description: 2 boxes = 14 diaries

Scope and Content Note

The Diaries series contains fourteen notebooks from the period of 1977 - 1982. Eleven notebooks contain travel notes, primarily concerning workshops. In addition to practical notes and narrative description, these diaries contain observations on the workshops and thoughts on Rogers's relationships with women. One notebook relates dreams, memories, and personal musings unrelated to travel, and two others are purely records of dreams. All of the diaries are currently restricted.

University of Chicago Counseling Center Discussion Papers

Physical Description: 3 boxes

Scope and Content Note

Rogers established the first Counseling Center at the University of Chicago when he moved there from Ohio State in 1945. The Counseling Center Discussion Papers were ideas, ruminations, or research papers privately circulated to Counseling Center staff and other interested affiliates for the purpose of feedback, review and discussion. These papers were seen as a place for free exchange of ideas, speculation, and development of theories and philosophies. Nine volumes were printed, from 1955 - 1963, under the editorship of first Rogers, then Jack Butler, James Bebout, and finally Martha Clayton and Arnold Rachman.

Arrangement

The University of Chicago Counseling Center Discussion Papers are arranged chronologically.

Correspondence

Physical Description: 4 boxes

Scope and Content Note

The bulk of this series is formed by letters between Rogers and his fiancée Helen Elliott from 1921 to 1924, the period of their courtship during which he attended the University of Wisconsin-Madison. Also included in the series are letters to Helen, 1974 - 1978; professional correspondence, 1950 - 1968; and letters of condolence to Rogers on his wife's death, 1979.

Center for the Studies of the Person

Physical Description: 21 Boxes

Scope and Content Note

Rogers founded this loosely-organized Center ("a non-organization") with approximately twenty-five of his associates from WBSI in 1968 as a base for its members' various projects and workshops. Only the secretaries received a salary, and no one person ran the Center; the "non-director," a rotating position, acted as spokesperson. The CSP continues at its original location in La Jolla. For sound recordings and videotapes of CSP lectures and workshops, see the Audiovisual series.

Subseries

Administrative: Group notices, minutes of annual and board meetings, Center-wide grant seeking, celebrations, and other general issues that affected all members of CSP.

Carl Rogers and Associates was an advanced learning program using the Person-Centered Approach. It also incorporated the Ongoing Learning Program "Responsible Group," a dozen or so CSP associates who were more involved in the operations of CSP and CR & A.

The Carl Rogers Peace Project / Institute for Peace was created and co-directed by Gay Leah Swenson. The former name was used prior to Rogers's death in 197; the latter was adopted following his death.

Conference: "The Central America Challenge" (The Vienna Peace Project Workshop, Rust, Austria, 1 - 4 November 1985). This was the Peace Project's first international person-centered workshop, and was attended by sixty-five leaders from seventeen countries in an attempt to find a common bond of humanity.

Living Now is a workshop-oriented program headed by Gay Leah Swenson and Nel Kandel, but drawing upon the skills and interests of other CSP staffers to lead seminars and workshops. Such topics as maximizing personal potential within times of personal and global transition.

The Workshop subseries contains those few workshops held under the general auspices of the CSP, rather than one if its sub-groups.

Arrangement

The Center for the Studies of the Person materials are arranged by subseries; within the subseries the arrangement is generally chronological. Some of the subseries relate to a particular program within CSP, e.g., Living Now, whereas others affect all those involved with CSP, e.g., Administrative. The Peace Project subseries is further divided into sub-subseries.

Carl Rogers Memorial Library

Physical Description: 18 Boxes

Scope and Content Note

This series of reprints and offprints comes from the Carl Rogers Memorial Library of the CSP. It includes approximately 600 articles, chapters, interviews, and unpublished manuscripts spanning the years 1922 -1987. These materials were initially collected and arranged by Nel Kandel, director of the Carl Rogers Memorial Library. This collection of reprints was given to the Humanistic Psychology Archives and has been incorporated into the Carl R. Rogers Collection. Only information from the CRML file has been used in creating this series list. As a result the individual records may appear incomplete, e.g., no journal citation, no page numbers, etc. The identifying number or number-letter combination in the subseries of materials by Rogers represents the year of publication and the sequence of publication among Rogers's publications during that year. These numbers were assigned by the Schmid bibliography of Rogers's works in Vienna.

Arrangement

The Carl Rogers Memorial Library reprints are divided between works by Rogers and works about Rogers, and are arranged alphabetically within those divisions.

Audiovisual Materials

Physical Description: Approximately 300 items

Scope and Content Note

This is a separate series for sound recordings, film reels, and video recordings that do not fit with any other series, e.g., Biographical. This series is primarily comprised of recordings of Rogers at work: delivering lectures, working with groups, interviewing clients. In addition, many other CSP staff members and guest lecturers are represented, either in collaboration with Rogers or on their own.

Arrangement

Arrangement and reformatting of audiovisual materials is currently underway. Approximately 400 audio recordings and 60 video cassettes have been indexed as of December 1999.
