Biographical / Historical
Since the founding of UC Santa Cruz, the college core course has been an integral part of the undergraduate experience. All ten residential colleges at UCSC require their first year students to take a core course. The Stevenson core course was established as a year-long class in 1966, focused on the theme of "Culture and Society." At this writing (2016) the Stevenson core course is a two quarter series organized along the theme of "Self and Society." The course is intended to challenge and expand first year students’ perspectives on “self” and “society” and the interaction between the two through a close engagement with foundational religious, political, philosophical, and critical texts. The current iteration of the course features seminal works by Plato, Jean-Jacques Rousseau, Karl Marx, Friedrich Nietzsche, Sigmund Freud, Virginia Woolf, Jean-Paul Sartre, Mohandas Gandhi, Malcolm X, Gloria Anzaldúa and Marjane Satrapi, as well as key excerpts from the Old Testament, New Testament, Qur’an, Tao Te Ching, Bhagavad-Gita, and more.

A critical element of the course is its biweekly plenary lecture series, in which a distinguished faculty member from a range of departments within the humanities visits to explicate the texts in light of new research and current events. Past lecturers include Carlos Noreña, Norman O. Brown, and Hayden White, with topics ranging from Cicero to Kafka, evolution to existentialism, and everything in between. Over the years, “Self & Society” has been cut from three quarters to two, and lectures have been reduced from weekly to biweekly, but the course maintains the same rigor and commitment to cultivating a thriving intellectual community both in and out of the classroom. This collection includes roughly all of the recorded plenary lectures between fall 1974 and winter 2000.
