Administrative History

The Campus Planning Office is responsible for facilitating and coordinating long-range academic, fiscal, and facilities planning activities for the UC San Diego campus. The Campus Planning Office has undergone numerous changes in organization, reporting lines, and scope.

Prior to 1957, all San Diego campus construction and improvement projects were managed by University of California Office of Architects and Engineers staff at UC Berkeley and UC Los Angeles. In 1957, a new Office of Architects and Engineers (OAE) was established at UC San Diego. J. W. Tippetts was appointed campus Building Program Coordinator and head of the OAE. The creation of the OAE and appointment of Tippetts coincided with the Regents' February 1957 approval of a master campus plan for the new San Diego general campus.

The Building Program Coordinator oversaw the building program for the new general campus and for Scripps Institution of Oceanography. The OAE was staffed by planning and construction professionals with backgrounds in architecture, engineering, planning, inspection, and administrative support. University buildings were designed by private architecture firms with the advice of the office. The OAE managed the projects from the time it was designated a priority in the University's statewide building program until its completion.

The Regents approved the development of the general campus site in October 1959, and approved an operating budget for FY 1960/61 in November of that year. These decisions were closely followed by the March 1960 approval of a master site plan for the School of Science and Engineering as well as plans for the first two buildings to be constructed. In August 1960, a unified landscape plan was begun for the entire campus, preserving the natural beauty of the site. As the campus' academic program developed, enrollments began to grow, and additional land was acquired by the University, J. W. Tippetts and his OAE staff were responsible for the management of all campus physical infrastructure projects.

In December 1964, Chancellor John S. Galbraith created a new position of Assistant to the Chancellor for Planning and Analysis and appointed J. W. Tippetts. Established as a part of the Office of the Chancellor, Tippetts' planning unit was staffed by members of OAE. The unit oversaw the planning and analysis functions related to campus administration. This included the oversight of the building program and of space utilization, which were previously supervised by the OAE. The OAE, now led by Chief Campus Architect Mac A. Cason, served to coordinate between the University, the state of California, and the various contractors and architectural firms involved in the building program.

In the mid-1960s, the name of the Planning and Analysis Office changed to the Office of Programming and Analytical Studies, and Chancellor Galbraith appointed Werner Lendenmann as Director in 1967. The Office worked with growth projections, coordinated capital improvement programs and Federal grant programs, prepared long-range fiscal plans based on enrollment and staffing projections, and developed an information management system. The office was staffed by analysts who assisted project building advisory committees and worked on equipment and grant proposals. Analysts in the Office also managed student and staff data to aid in the campus building programs, workload analysis, and fiscal planning.

In August 1969, Chancellor William J. McGill created the Office of the Director of Planning and appointed Werner Lendenmann the Director. The Office of the Director of Planning was established as a clearinghouse for all campus planning, programming, and budgeting, and as a repository of campus-wide and University-wide statistical data. The Director of Planning reported to the Chancellor until 1974, after which time the Director's reporting line shifted to the Vice Chancellor for Administration (now named Vice Chancellor for Resource Management & Planning). Over time, Lendenmann's title changed to Assistant Vice Chancellor for Planning and then to Associate Vice Chancellor for Planning. In July 1980, the office was renamed the Office of Planning and Budget. Chancellor Richard Atkinson appointed V. Wayne Kennedy as Director of the Office, and Werner Lendenmann served as Associate Director. The change in name coincided with a major reorganization in which the budget office was combined with the departments of Academic Planning, Administrative Records, Capital Budget and Space Management, and Internal Audit. In March 1982, Kennedy moved on to become the Vice Chancellor for Resource Management and Planning (formerly named Vice Chancellor for Administration) until 1993. In this capacity, he oversaw all administrative functions of the campus and managed all of the offices within the Planning and Budget organization, as well as the Offices of Contract and Grant Administration, Development, and Public Information.

The Office of Planning and Budget was renamed the Campus Planning Office in 1984. The Campus Planning Office is one of three units within Planning, Design and Construction. The functions of the current Campus Planning Office are separate from those of Capital Program Management and Design & Development Services; however, the responsibilities and functions of these three offices had been mixed in a variety of ways over the past decades. Over the years, the Campus Planning Office has held administrative oversight over several offices, committees, and administrative functions at different points in time, including academic planning, administration, budget, capital planning, physical infrastructure, and space management. Today, the Campus Planning Office oversees five units: Capital Planning, Community Planning, Environmental Planning, Space Planning, Facilities Information Management. The Campus Planning Office has oversight of the Campus/Community Planning Committee and the Open Space Committee. Additionally, the Marine Sciences Physical Planning Committee is jointly administered by the Campus Planning Office and Scripps Institution of Oceanography.

Scope and Content of Collection

The records of the Campus Planning Office document the office's administration, projects, and planning activities for the UC San Diego campus and community. Prominent subjects include campus academic, capital, facilities, and space planning. The records document the development of campus master and academic plans, construction and renovation projects, and the work of several planning committees.

Today, the Campus Planning Office is one of three units within Planning, Design and Construction. The functions of the current Campus Planning Office are separate from those of Capital Program Management and Design & Development Services; however, the responsibilities and functions of these three offices have been mixed in a variety of ways over the past decades. Over the years, the Campus Planning Office has held administrative oversight over several offices, committees, and administrative functions at different points in time, including academic planning, administration, budget, capital planning, physical infrastructure, and space management. Due to this historical crossover, the Campus Planning Office records document some activities which are today the purview of Capital Planning Management and Design & Development Services.

CAMPUS / COMMUNITY PLANNING

Scope and Contents

Series 4) CAMPUS / COMMUNITY PLANNING: Documents the Campus Planning Office's campus and urban planning development responsibilities. The files document the cooperative campus and regional planning processes of UC San Diego, including the discussion of special projects which impact the campus community, the city of La Jolla, and the city of San Diego. Includes recommendations to the chancellor regarding San Diego community development projects. Documents UC San Diego's interests in each project, and includes correspondence, reports, committee meeting minutes, agreements with city agencies, and environmental impact assessment and planning reports.

Of particular interest are the committee materials present in the first three subseries. These records document the planning process at UC San Diego, including the discussion of special projects which impact the campus community. The first two subseries contain the meeting minutes and recommendations formulated by the Committee on University Community Planning (CUCP) and the Campus Community Planning Committee (CPC). Effective 1 July 1977, the functions of the Campus Planning Committee and the Committee on University-Community Planning were assumed by the new Campus / Community Planning Committee (CCPC); the work of the CCPC is documented in the third subseries.

Arranged in five subseries: A) Committee on University Community Planning (CUCP), B) Campus Planning Committee (CPC), C) Campus / Community Planning Committee (CCPC), D) Long Range Development Planning, E) University / Community Planning.

CAPITAL PLANNING

Scope and Contents

Series 5) CAPITAL PLANNING: Includes materials related to UC San Diego budgeting of financial resources. The campus' Major Capital Improvement Program subseries documents the evolving long-range plans for the campus' capital improvement projects from 1956-1989. The Colleges subseries is arranged in order of established colleges.

Arranged in two subseries: A) Major Capital Improvement Program, and B) Colleges.

PROJECTSScope and Contents

Series 6: PROJECTS: Consists of administrative and planning documents for proposed facilities and spaces, renovation initiatives, and community development projects. The files largely consist of Project Planning Guides (PPGs), which were prepared by Capital Planning office staff members and submitted to the UC Regents for design revisions and project approval. The PPGs compile the justification, project schedule, capital improvement budget, and funding plan. The records also include related materials, including budgetary material, correspondence, Detailed Project Programs (DPPs) and preliminary plan submissions (PPSs), equipment lists, and supplementary data. The PPSs identify the space and capital needs of the campus projects.

Arranged in five subseries: A) Main Campus, B) East Campus, C) Scripps Institution of Oceanography, D) UCSD Medical Center-Hillcrest Campus, and E) San Diego Community.

The Main Campus subseries includes building, property, and renovation projects for all of upper and lower (Scripps Institution of Oceanography) campus. This includes all of the colleges, schools, and departments; all academic, administrative, residential, and research buildings; the Veterans Administration Hospital and University Hospital facilities; and surrounding campus infrastructure. The East Campus subseries includes all university projects located east of the I-5. The San Diego Community subseries includes all projects located outside of the geographic boundaries of university property in which UC San Diego had a vested interest.

	SPACE PLANNING
	Scope and Contents
	Series 7) SPACE PLANNING: Arranged in three subseries: A) Colleges, B) Growth Plans, and C) Space Requirements.
	The Colleges subseries begins with materials concerning the overall college system, followed by records in order of established colleges. The Growth Plans subseries documents the campus' evolving thinking regarding expansion over time. The Space Requirements subseries deals with all administrative, academic, and medical buildings on campus.
