Biography

Steve Routt (b. 1943) has taught English at Tokay High School (Lodi, California) since 1982. Routt, a fourth generation Californian with a considerable interest in the history of his native state, holds a Master of Arts in Education from California State University, Chico. In about 1987 someone gave Mr. Routt a copy of Eliot Wigginton's Sometimes a Shining Moment: The Foxfire Experience (1972). This book, which chronicles Georgia English teacher Wigginton's efforts to involve his students in writing by interviewing locals and chronicling the life and history of their region, inspired Steve Routt to create an Oral History Project at Tokay High School.

The Tokay High School English curriculum requires that sophomores be exposed to some sort of research project. Steve Routt found that students liked exposure to "real people" and enjoyed doing work that wasn't classroom oriented. Routt's plan was to assist the students to realize the role of history in their lives through the wealth of information they could garner by means of personal interviews with those who had "been there." Initially the Oral History Project focused on government and on general topics like the Vietnam War. Subsequently, these were displaced by San Joaquin County topics with a past history of at least fifty years. Since spring 1993, each semester's best papers have been published in The Grape Press, the Oral History Project's own local history magazine. Students have a semester to interview at least one person, transcribe the interview and write a ten page paper based on the transcript. Each completed project contains photographs, the written report, the interview tape and transcript. All students find the project challenging, and, although they are neither accomplished writers nor sophisticated research scholars, they make a substantial contribution to future San Joaquin County history research through their record of the comments and observations of individuals who have spent considerable time in the County. It is Routt's hope that future generations will have a better understanding of the twentieth century through the work of his student researchers and that the students themselves will come to realize that the work they have done will be valued long after they are gone.

Scope and Content

The Routt Collection contains local histories by Tokay High School (Lodi, Calif.) students together with audio tapes of interviews with source persons which formed part of the basis for the student papers (1989-1995). Subject matter ranges from general topics like "juvenile delinquency" to very specific ones such as "The Lodi Muslim Mosque." The bulk of the essays and interview tapes focus on San Joaquin County where Tokay High School is located.
