Biographical note

Frank Rolfe was born in Gold Hill, Nevada in 1874. He was an engineer, geologist, surveyor, and seismologist with an interest in California history. His parents were Ovid D. Rolfe (died 1902), a miner on the Comstock Lode, and Allena B. Bishop (died 1922). Rolfe's parents were married in 1869 February 4 at 8:00 p.m. in Allena's hotel parlor in Sacramento. In 1881, the family moved to a ranch in Temescal Valley in Riverside County near what is now the city of Corona, California. Rolfe's mother moved the children to Los Angeles sometime between 1899 and 1900 to ensure a better education for her children. The family spent their winters in the city and summers on the family ranch.

Rolfe graduated from Los Angeles High School in 1894, earned a degree in geology from Stanford University in 1898, and a master's degree from the University of Southern California in 1924.

He worked on the Los Angeles aqueduct survey and possibly on the construction of the Ludlow and Southern Railway. Rolfe served as vice president of the Southwest Section of the Seismological Society of America beginning in 1921. He was also a long-time member of the Historical Society of Southern California.

Rolfe authored articles on California history and geology that appeared in the Historical Society publications and the Los Angeles Times in the 1930s. Rolfe also wrote editorial pieces for the Los Angeles Times during World War I and authored Commercial Geography of southern California published by Biola Press, circa 1915.

His collection of Californiana was donated to the Southwest Museum in 1963. His diaries, field notes, and other various articles and letters are also part of the collection. Rolfe's collection of negatives and photographs, taken between 1899 and 1959, depicting locations throughout California and the Western United States, are housed at the Huntington Library Photo Archives.
